Miscellaneous.

A Dollar on the Conscience.

BY T. S. ARTHUR.

"Fifty-five cents a yard, I believe you said? The customer was opening her purse. Now fifty cents a yard was the price of the goods, and so Mr. Levering had informed the lady. She misunderstood him, however. In the community, Mr. Levering had the reputation of being a conscientious, high-minded man. He knew that he was thus estimated, and self-complacently appropriated the good opinion as clearly his due.

It came instantly to the lip of Mr. Levering to say, "Yes, fifty-five." The love of gain was strong in his mind, and ever ready to accede to new plans for adding dollar to dollar. But, ere the words were uttered, a disturbing perception of something wrong restrained him.

"I wish twenty yards," said the customer, taking it for granted that fifty-five cents was the price of the goods.

Mr. Levering was still silent; though he commenced promptly to measure off the goods.

"Not dear at that price," remarked the lady.

"I think not," said the storekeeper. "I bought the case of goods from which this piece was taken very low."

"Twenty yards at fifty-five cents. Just eleven dollars." The customer opened her purse as she thus spoke, and counted out the sum of glittering gold dollars. "That is right, I believe," and she pushed the money towards Mr. Levering, who, with a kind of automatic movement of his hand, drew forward the coin and swept it into his till.

"Send the bundle to No. 300, Argyle street," said the lady, with a bland smile, as she turned from the counter; and the half-bewildered store-keeper—

"Stay, madam! there is a slight mistake!" The words were in Mr. Levering's thoughts, and on the point of gaining utterance, but he had not the courage to speak. He had gained a dollar in the transaction beyond his due, and already it was lying heavily on his conscience. Willingly would he have thrown it off; but, when about to do so, the quick suggestion came, that, in acknowledging to the lady the fact of her having paid five cents a yard too much, he might falter in his explanation, and thus betray his attempt to do her wrong. And so he kept silence, and let her depart beyond recall.

Anything gained at the price of virtuous self-respect is acquired at too large a cost. A single dollar on the conscience may press so heavily as to bear down a man's spirits, and rob him of all the delights of life. It was so in the present case. Vain was it that Mr. Levering sought self-justification. Argue the matter as he would, he found it impossible to escape the smarting conviction that he had unjustly exacted a dollar from one of his customers. Many times through the day he found himself in a musing, abstracted state, and, on rousing himself therefrom, became conscious, in his external thought, that it was the dollar by which he was troubled.

"I'm very foolish," said he, mentally, as he walked homeward, after closing his store for the evening. "Very foolish to worry myself about a trifle like this. The goods were cheap enough at fifty-five cents, and she is quite as well contented with her bargain as if she had only paid fifty."

But it would not do. The dollar was on his conscience, and he sought in vain to remove it by efforts of his kind.

Mr. Levering had a wife and three pleasant children. They were the sunlight of his home. When the business of the day was over, he usually returned to his own fireside with buoyant feeling. It was not so on this occasion. There was a pressure on his bo-some—a sense of discomfort—a want of self-satisfaction. The kiss of his wife, and the clinging arms of his children, as they were twined around his neck, did not bring the old delight.

"What is the matter with you this evening, dear? Are you not well?" inquired Mrs. Levering, breaking in upon the thoughtful mood of her husband, as he sat in unwonted silence.

"I'm perfectly well," he replied, rousing himself, and forcing a smile.

"You look sober."

"Do I? Another forced smile."

"Something troubles you, I'm afraid."

"O no; it's all in your imagination."

"Are you sick, papa?" now asks a bright little fellow, clambering upon his knee.

"Why no, love, I'm not sick. Why did you think so?"

"Because you don't play horses with me."

"Oh dear! Is that the ground of your suspicion?" replied the father, laughing. "Come we'll soon scatter them to the winds."

And Mr. Levering commenced a game of romps with the children. But he tired long before they grew weary, nor did he, from the beginning, enter into this sport with his usual zest.

"Does your head ache, pa?" inquired the child who had previously suggested sickness, as he saw his father leave the floor, and seat himself, with some gravity of manner, on a chair.

"Not this evening, dear," answered Mrs. Levering.

"Why don't you play longer, then?"

"Oh pa!" exclaimed another child, speaking from a sudden thought, "you don't know what a time we had at school to-day?"

"Ah!" what was the cause?"

"Oh! you'll hardly believe it. But Eddy Jones stole a dollar from Maggy Enfield!"

"Stole a dollar!" ejaculated Mr. Levering.

His voice was husky, and he felt a cold thrill passing along every nerve.

"Yes, pa! he stole a dollar! Oh, wasn't it dreadful?"

"Perhaps he was wrongly accused," suggested Mrs. Levering.

"Emma Wilson saw him do it, and they found the dollar in his pocket. Oh! he looked so pale, and it made me almost sick to hear him cry as if his heart would break."

"What did they do with him?" asked Mrs. Levering.

"They sent for his mother, and she took him home. Wasn't it dreadful?"

"It must have been dreadful for his poor mother," Mr. Levering ventured to remark.

"But more dreadful for him, said Mrs. Levering. "Will he ever forget his crime and disgrace? Will the pressure of that dollar on his conscience ever be removed? He may never do so wicked an act again; but the memory of this wrong deed cannot be wholly effaced from his mind."

How rebukingly fell all these words on the ears of Mr. Levering! Ah! what would he not then have given to have the weight of that dollar removed? Its pressure was so great as almost to suffocate him. It was all in vain that he tried to be cheerful, or to take an interest in what was passing immediately around him. The innocent prattle of his children had lost its wonted charm, and there seemed an accusing expression in the eye of his wife, as, in the concern his changed aspect had occasioned, she looked soberly upon him. Unable to bear all this, Mr. Levering went out—something unusual for him—and walked the streets for an hour. On his return, the children were in bed, and he had regained sufficient self-control to meet his wife with a less disturbed appearance.

On the next morning, Mr. Levering felt something better. Sleep had left his mind more tranquil. Still there was a pressure on his feelings, which thought could trace to that unlucky dollar. About an hour after going to his store, Mr. Levering saw his customer of the day previous enter, and move along towards the place where he stood behind his counter. His heart gave a sudden bound, and the color rose to his face. An accusing conscience was quick to conclude as to the object of her visit. But he soon saw that no suspicion of wrong dealing was in the lady's mind. With a pleasant half-recognition, she asked to look at certain articles, from which she made purchases, and in paying for them, placed a ten dollar bill in the hand of the storekeeper.

"That weight shall be off my conscience," said Mr. Levering to himself, as he began counting out the change due his customer; and, purposely, he gave her one dollar more than was justly hers in that transaction. The lady glanced her eyes over the money, and seemed slightly bewildered. Then, much to the storekeeper's relief, opened her purse and dropped it there.

"All right again!" was the mental ejaculation of Mr. Levering, as he saw the purse disappear in the lady's pocket, while his breast expanded with a sense of relief.

The customer turned from the counter, and had nearly gained the door, when she paused, drew out her purse, and emptying the contents of one end into her hand, carefully noted the amount. Then walking back, she said with a thoughtful air—

"I think you've made a mistake in the change, Mr. Levering."

"I presume not, ma'am. I gave you four and thirty-five," was the quick reply.

"Four, thirty-five," said the lady, musingly. "Yes, here is just four, thirty-five."

"That's right; yes, that's right," Mr. Levering spoke, somewhat nervously.

"The article came to six dollars and sixty-five cents, I believe?"

"Yes, yes; that was it!"

"Then three dollars and thirty-five cents will be my right change," said the lady, placing a small gold coin on the counter. "You gave me too much."

The customer turned away and retired from the store, leaving that dollar still on the conscience of Mr. Levering. "I'll throw it into the street," said he to himself, impatiently. "Or give it to the first beggar that comes along." But conscience whispered that the dollar wasn't his, either to give away or to throw away. Such prodigality, or impulsive benevolence, would be at the expense of another, and this could not mend the matter.

"This is all squeamishness," said Mr. Levering, trying to argue against his convictions. But it was of no avail. His convictions remained as clear and rebuking as ever.

The next day was the Sabbath, and Mr. Levering went to church, as usual, with his family. Scarcely had he taken a seat in his pew, when, on raising his eyes, they rested on the countenance of the lady from whom he had abstracted the dollar. How quickly his cheek flushed! How troubled became, instantly, the beatings of his heart! Unhappy Mr. Levering! He could not make the usual responses, that day, in the services; and when the congregation joined in the swelling hymn of praise, his voice was heard not in the general thanksgiving. Scarcely a word of the eloquent sermon reached his ears, except something about "dishonest dealing."

He was so deeply engaged in discussing the question, whether or he should get rid of the troublesome dollar by dropping it into the contribution box, at the close of the morning service, to listen to the words of the preacher. This question was not settled when the box came round. But this disposition of the money proved only a temporary palliative. There was still a pressure on his feelings; still a weight on his conscience that gradually became heavier. Poor man! What was he to do? How was he to get this dollar removed from his conscience? He could not send it back to the lady and tell her the whole truth. Such an exposure of himself would not only be humiliating, but hurtful to his character. It would be seeking to do right, in the infliction of a wrong to himself.

At last, Mr. Levering, who had ascertained the lady's name and residence, inclosed her a dollar, anonymously, stating that it was her due; that the writer had obtained it from her, unjustly, in a transaction which he did not care to name, and could not rest until he had made restitution.

Ah! the humiliation of spirit suffered by Mr. Levering in thus seeking to get ease for his conscience! It was one of his bitterest life experiences. The longer the dollar remained in his possession, the heavier became its pressure, until he could endure it no longer. He felt not only disgraced in his own eyes, but humbled in the presence of his wife and children. Not for worlds would he have suffered them to look into his heart.

If a simple act of restitution could have covered all the past, happy would it have been for Mr. Levering. But this was not possible. The deed was entered in the book of his life, and nothing could efface the record. Though obscured by the accumulating dust of time, now and then a hand sweeps unexpectedly over the page, and the writing is revealed. Though that dollar has been removed from his conscience, and he is now guiltless of wrong, yet there are times when the old pressure is felt with painful distinctness.

Earnest seeker after this world's goods, take warning by Mr. Levering, and beware how, in a moment of weak yielding, you get a dollar on your conscience. One of two evils must follow. It will give you pain and trouble, or callous the spot where it rests. And the latter of these evils is that which is most to be deplored.

A Chapter of First Things.

The oldest organized military company in America is the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company, of Boston. It was chartered in 1638, under the title of "The Military Company of Massachusetts." About one hundred and forty years ago the word "Honorable" was applied to the Company, and one hundred and thirty years since the name "Ancient" was added. The oldest printed election sermon extant, was delivered before this Corps, June 3d, 1672.

The first American ship that circumnavigated the world sailed from Boston nearly seventy years ago. In 1792 Capt. Robert Gray, of the ship Columbia, of Boston, discovered and sailed twenty miles upon a river on the Northwest coast of America, to which he gave the name of his ship, which it now retains. This was nineteen years before the company was formed under the auspices of John Jacob Astor of New York, which founded the first settlement ever made by civilized man in that region.

The first privateer fitted out in the United States during the Revolutionary war, sailed from Newburyport, and was owned by Nathaniel Tracy, Esq. The ships of this gentleman captured one hundred and twenty sail, amounting to 23,360 tons, from the enemy during the war. These prizes, with their cargoes, were sold for three million nine hundred and fifty thousand specie dollars. Of this sum, Mr. Tracy devoted $167,219 to the army and other public demands. With these ships were taken 2225 men, prisoners of war.

The "Stripes and Stars" as the American ensign, were displayed for the first time, in the river Thames, by Capt. Nicholas Johnson of Newburyport, commander of the ship "Count de Grasse."

The first chime of bells in America was presented to Christ Church, Boston, one hundred and ten years ago. The inscription upon the third tenor reads—"We are the first ring of bells cast for the British Empire in North America, A. R. 1744."

The first Sunday School in America was established at Philadelphia, in 1791. The first in New England was commenced at Beverly, Mass., in 1810. The first one in Boston was in connection with Dr. Lowell's society, in 1812. The first one established by Trinitarians was commenced at Christ Church, (Episcopal), in 1815.

The first monument erected to the memory of Washington in this country, was placed on the side of the chancel of Christ Church, in Boston. It was presented by Shubael Bell, Esq., and the marble bust was executed by an Italian artist.

The Quincy Railroad, for the transportation of granite from the quarries at Quincy to Neponset river, constructed in 1826, was the first attempt to introduce that mode of transportation in this country. Its opening less than thirty years ago may be considered the commencement of the American railway system.

The first attempt at glass working in America, was by some Germans, in the town of Quincy, some years before the Revolution. The place in Quincy occupied by their establishment is called "Germantown" to this day.—Boston Transcript.

Theory of the Beard.

"As man's organization, however, permits the hair to grow on his face, known as whiskers, a great variety of 'cut and colors are suffered to luxuriate—some to edify the medical man, some to excite the envy of the stripling, some to charm the young ladies by their 'capillary attraction' some to disgust the old women, and some to offend the deacons at church! There are the medical beards, the fancy, and the convenient."

"It is admitted, generally, that the beard should be trimmed and kept in a proper compass. But it is questioned whether nature will permit it as a right. Just in proportion as a man trims his beard and cuts his hair, just so does he violate nature. If shaving close stimulates its growth thirty times the ordinary amount, then keeping it half an inch long, when it would grow a foot, does not much reduce the amount of stimulus wasted in its continual growth."

"A farmer takes his saw and pruning-knife and goes out into his orchard, and commences trimming up a scrubby tree, and cutting down the numerous suckers growing up from the roots. Soon your fancy city man appears, revelling behind his bushy 'manly appendage,' and exclaims, 'Why, man alive, what are you about here?'"

"Trimming up this tree, so as to get large and fair fruit?"

"Large and fair fruit?" responds the bearded man with astonishment. "Don't you know you must have increased force in your bearing limbs, to get larger fruit?"

"Yes, that's what I'm doing—cutting off the suckers and throwing the sap into the upper branches, where it is needed."

"But," says the citizen, "don't you know that these suckers will grow thirty times as fast, and instead of getting more sap into the upper branches, you will reduce it? Besides, you are violating nature, which intends that suckers should be here, else they never would grow. Strange farmers are so unsentientific."

"The farmer stops his work, and after gazing a few moments at the whiskered man, exclaims with a smile, 'Why, sir, you'd make a good professor in a Farmer's College. I know by experience, and so does the simplest boy on a farm, that we do get more sap in the upper branches, and larger fruit, by this operation—violation of nature or not. And as to suckers growing out thirty times more rapidly, that is all folly, proved so by facts. Why, if I should let these suckers grow, wouldn't it take a good deal of the nourishment of the tree to keep them alive, provided they didn't grow much?'"

"Friend," replied the citizen, "isn't it just the same with trees as with the beard? If I shave my beard two or three times a week, it will grow thirty times as fast, and hence a great deal of vitality goes off with it, and is wasted."

"Yes, just so," returns the farmer. "Suckers are like beards. And let me give you a little bit of advice, since you have taken the liberty to give me some—if you will just shave off your beard two or three times a week, the vital force carried up will greatly improve your brains. Of course, the whiskered man made no reply to 'such stuff.'—New England Farmer.

Sunday.

Sunday should be the best day of all the seven;—not ushered in with ascetic form, or lengthened face, or stiff and rigid manners. Sweetly upon the still Sabbath air should float the matin hymn of happy childhood; blending with early song of birds, and wafted upward, with flower's incense, to Him whose name is Love. It should be no day for puzzling the half-developed brain of childhood with gloomy creeds, to shake the simple faith that prompts the innocent lips to say,—'Our Father.' It should be no day to sit upright on stiff-backed chairs, till the golden sun should set. No; the birds should not be more welcome to warble, the flowers to drink in the air and sunlight, or the trees to toss their little limbs free and fearless. 'I'm so sorry that to-morrow is Sunday' from whence does this sad lament issue? From under your roof, oh mistaken but well-meaning Christian parents; from the lips of your child, whom you compel to listen to two or three unintelligible sermons and switched between Sunday schools, and finished off at nightfall by tedious repetitions of creeds and catechisms, 'till sleep releases your weary victim! No wonder your child shudders, when the minister tells him that 'Heaven is one eternal Sabbath.' Oh, mistaken parent! relax the overstrained bow—prevent the fearful rebound, and make the Sabbath what God designed it, not a weariness but the best and happiest day of all the seven.

Good Wives.

That young lady will make a good wife who does not apologize when you find her at work in the kitchen, but continues at her task until the work is finished.

When you hear a lady say, "I shall attend church, and wear my old bonnet and every day gown, for I fear we shall have a rain storm," depend upon it, she will be sure to make a good wife.

When a daughter remarks, "I would not hire help, for I can assist you to do the work in the kitchen," set it down that she will make somebody a good wife.

When you overhear a young woman saying to her father, "Don't purchase a very expensive or showy dress for me, but one that will wear best," you may always be certain she will make a good wife.

When you see a female arise early, get breakfast, and do up her mother's work in season, and then sit down to sew or knit, depend upon it she will make a good wife.

When you see a female anxious to learn a trade, so as to earn something to support herself, and perhaps aged parents, you may be sure she will make one of the best of wives. The best qualities to look after in a wife are industry, humanity, neatness, gentleness, benevolence and piety. When you find these, there is no danger. You will obtain a treasure, and not regret your choice to the last period.

Look before you Kick.

A minister, on his way to preach a funeral sermon in the country, called to see one of his members, an old widow lady, who lived near the road he was traveling. The old lady had just been making sausages, and she felt proud of them they were so plump, round and sweet. Of course she insisted on her minister taking a few links home to his family. He objected on account of not having his port-manteau with him. The objection was soon overruled, and the old lady, after rapping them in a rag, carefully placed bundle in either pocket of the preacher's capacious great coat. Thus equipped for the funeral.

While attending to the solemn ceremonies of the grave, some hungry dog scented the sausage, and was not long in tracking them to the pockets of the good man's overcoat. Of course this was a great annoyance, and he was several times under the necessity of kicking the whelp away. The obsequies at the grave completed, the minister and congregation repaired to the church, where the funeral discourse was to be preached.

After the sermon was finished, the minister halted to make some remarks to his congregation, when a brother who wished to have an appointment given out, ascended the steps of the pulpit, and gave the minister's coat a hitch to get his attention. The divine, thinking it a dog having a design upon his pocket, raised his foot, gave a sudden kick, and sent the good brother sprawling down the steps!

"You will excuse me, brethren and sisters," said the minister confusedly; and without looking at the work he had just done, for I could not avoid it—I have sausages in my pocket and that dog has been trying to grab them ever since I came upon the premises."

Your readers may judge of the effect such an announcement would have at a funeral. Tears of sorrow were suddenly exchanged for smiles of merriment.—Germaniana Emporium.

The Figure Nine.

This is a peculiar figure, with which numerous tricks may be performed. Not to mention the fact that the fundamental rules of arithmetic are proved by the 9, there are among others the following curiosities connected with the figure:

Add together as many nines as you please, and the figures indicating the amount, when added together, will be 9, or 9 repeated. The same is true in multiplying any number of times—the sums of the figures in the product will be 9, or a number of nines. For instance—

Twice 9 are 18—8 and 1 are 9.

Three times 9 are 27—7 and 2 are 9.

Four times 9 are 36—3 and 3 are 9.

And so on until we come to eleven times 9 are 99; here we have 2 nines, or 18, but 1 and 8 are 9.

Twelve times 9 are 108—1 and 0 and 8 are 9.

The curious student may carry this on still further for amusement.

Another curiosity is exhibited in these different products of the 9 when multiplied by the digits, as follows, the products being 18, 27, 36, 45, &c.; reverse these and we have the remaining products, 54, 63, 72, 81.

The 9 digits, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, when added, amounts to 5 times 9; or instead of adding, multiply the middle figure by the last, and the amount will be the mysterious nines, or 45, and 4 and 5 are 9.

consistent with their liabilities. The innocent, therefore, suffer but rarely by this species of mercantile proscription. On the other hand, the rule is absolutely necessary to the commercial world, for, without it, payments could scarcely ever be depended on, and financial distress would frequently be alarmingly increased.

Strict business integrity, in this particular, depends much on the general character. A person who pays little regard to slight promises usually is somewhat careless of greater ones also. Defects of this kind, like flaws in machinery, never lessen, but always grow worse, until, finally, under the strain of a powerful temptation, they often break down a man's career forever. The most punctual man in keeping a trivial engagement, we have always found to be the exactest in their business transactions. In our experience, also, the men who never kept an engagement, to the moment, the men who were proverbially always "behind time," have been, mostly, those who have failed subsequently in business. We have learned, too, to be cautious of those who are over-ready to promise. It is the individual who carefully considers, before he makes a pledge, who can be most surely depended on to keep it. A multitude of promises necessarily prevents the promiser from observing them all, for one conflicts with the other, and disables even the best-intentioned. A disregard of promises, finally, is like a fungus, which imperceptibly spreads over the whole character, until the moral perceptions are perverted and the man actually comes to believe he does no wrong, even in breaking faith with his warmest friends.

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

Saturday, July 8th, 1854.

"BORN TO NO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE."

Hon. Charles Sumner.

This gentleman, in a late debate, endeavored to fortify his position as to his constitutional obligations in the rendition of fugitive slaves, by citing the opinion of Gen. Jackson, given in his message vetoing a bill to modify and continue the act to incorporate the subscribers to the Bank of the United States.

We think the illustration hardly sustains Mr. Sumner. Gen. Jackson's opinion was to this effect,—that each of the co-ordinate authorities of the Government was independent of the other two. "The Congress, the Executive, and the Court, must each for itself be guided by its own opinion of the constitution." "The opinion of the judges has no more authority over Congress, than the opinions of Congress have over the judges; and on that point, the President is independent of both."

In forming his own opinion he would unquestionably attach great weight to the reasoning of the Court, but he was not bound constitutionally to accept their decision. He held that he was bound by his oath to investigate and decide whether a measure was constitutional or not, for himself; and if it should appear to him to be unconstitutional, he must return the bill with his objections to the same, notwithstanding the opinion of the Court was clearly the other way in any precedent containing the same principle. Nor was it in the power of the Supreme Court to give vitality to the rejected measure by any judicial inquiry or proceeding. Gen. Jackson's reasoning was wholly to this point; he was not speaking of the obligations of citizens, or of the rights and duties of individual members of either House of Congress, or of the rights and power of the individual members of the Judiciary, but he was speaking of the co-ordinate authorities of the Government—of Congress, the Executive and the Judiciary. He spoke as the Executive. He simply declared the rights and power of the executive branch of the Government—that it was independent of both the other branches.

Every man is at liberty to question the opinion of Congress, of the Executive, and of the Judiciary, in all cases, and even in those wherein they all concur, and to dissent from them and endeavor to persuade the public mind into a conformity of opinion with his own. But it is not given to every man the right to determine the constitutionality of a law. Neither is it given to one member of Congress to decide the constitutionality of a bill, but it is given to a majority of the members of both branches of Congress to decide whether a bill before them is constitutional or not. When Congress and the Executive and the Court concur in opinion, that opinion should be accepted as constitutionally binding. There is no other appellate Court before whom the law can be re-examined except in the most extreme and desperate cases, such as justify and compel men to resort to violent resistance of arbitrary measures in vindication of their sense of duty. In these cases men hazard their own lives and liberty, and also the lives and liberty of others. It must be a clear case, one in which there can be no mistake, wherein the contest is between liberty and power, and cannot be determined except in the subjugation of one or the other. The contest between liberty and slavery in this country has not yet reached that crisis. The traitors and assassins of liberty in its own house are to be crushed out first. The representatives of the free states must elevate their moral courage to that point which their opponents have attained. They must feel that it is as honorable and brave, and truly heroic, to fight for freedom, as it is for southern men to fight for slavery. When the representatives of the North shall be seen banded together as one man—as the representatives of the South always are, and shall prove unequal to the effort to resist and repel the aggressions of the advocates and propagandists of slavery, then it will be time to consider the question of resistance by force and arms against the horrible acts of injustice and wickedness of the government of the country.

He then, in our opinion, who, speaking as an individual, declares that he is not bound to enforce a law which has received the solemn sanction of the Congress, the Executive, and of the Supreme Court of the country, speaks at the hazard of the loss of the public confidence eventually, and if he goes further and denies, after having sworn to uphold and support the laws and the constitution, that he is not bound by that oath to sustain a law, approved by every form and proceeding prescribed by the constitution for testing its constitutionality, incurs a fearful responsibility and proceeds on a principle not recognized by the constitution, and one which, if carried to its legitimate results, would destroy all constitutional obligations.

Able constitutional writers, lawyers and statesmen have controverted, and do controvert the doctrine of Gen. Jackson respecting the independence of the co-ordinate branches of the government; a priori untenable must be the opinion of Senator Sumner respecting the constitutional duty and right of each member of the Senate; and therefore how much more questionable and perilous is a current opinion, that each citizen of a state can determine for himself his constitutional duties against the solemnly declared opinion of every department of the government.

We have a higher duty to perform than to be considering how we can forcibly interrupt the operations of obnoxious laws. The public mind is to be quickened and elevated to a true sense of duty by seriously considering how great the issue is, and how great would be the loss of civil, religious, and political liberty. Then every man throughout the free states, who, by word or deed, or countenance, has aided in the passage of the Nebraska-Kansas bill will be politically condemned. Then they, who shall have helped by their votes, in Congress, to undermine and remove the barrier raised in 1820, against the "ever-tolling ocean" of the slave power, inundating the fairest portion of our country with its turbid, bitter, malignant and desolating waves, shall wish their names to be forgotten and call, in vain, upon the rocks and the mountains to cover them. Who can tell, but that there are those now alive, who shall live to look back upon these times with thankfulness, seeing that out of present trials and dangers to all liberty, has arisen a purer and more obedient, reverent, grateful, trusting, hoping and earnest spirit in the hearts of the people?

THE FOURTH. We had the usual demonstrations of fire-crackers, guns, rockets, and bell-ringing on that occasion. There seemed to be fewer cases of intoxication than usual. The Catholics did not attempt to pull down the national ensign as some rumor intimated they were going to do. Nor did any Abolition Know-Nothing attempt to do so, for the purpose of raising in its stead its own black flag, on whose folds are written Anarchy, Sedition, Civil Strife and Religious Feud—and War. The Flag of the Constitution yet floats freely over us, and he who attempts to haul it down by violent hands, or he who teaches principles that cause men to look upon it with other than love, pride, and patriotic emotions, will receive a traitor's fate. In the neighboring town of Dorchester an attempt to blow up a Catholic church with powder, was partially successful. Such a spirit of religious intolerance as that act evinced, ill comported with the Anniversary of American Independence. We envy not the feelings of the ruffians, who at midnight, sought the destruction of an humble house, built by the industry of serving girls and the laboring poor, for the worship—call it superstitious worship if you please—of God, after the manner of their fathers. Such liberty and independence as that—why, the less we have of them, the better.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE FOR JULY. This number is equal to any of its predecessors. The Harpers spare no expense in providing for their readers. Whoever has visited the Mountain House on the Catskills, will find in the first article, illustrated as it is, many things of pleasant memory; and whoever has not been there will feel that the graphic description of its scenes of curiosity, beauty and sublimity is almost an equivalent. Abbott continues his life of Napoleon and throws over his fiction—as the New York Tribune calls it—a charm and fascination not unlike those of the personal manners of his great hero.

Petridge & Co., Boston agents—and copies can be obtained at the Quincy Bookstore.

WORTH SEEING. There is now placed in the yard, between the Quincy Bookstore and the Jewelry shop of B. F. Meservey, for public inspection, and where it will remain only a few days, an exceedingly beautiful specimen of wrought Granite, on which is cut a Lion's head, representing the animal when in an enraged state. This work was done principally by Mr. Thomas Smith, a very ingenious and deserving workman, employed by Messrs. Wright & Barker of this town, who are supplying from their quarry, granite and work, equal to any which has yet been furnished for building material, either wrought in true artistic style, or hammered in an unsurpassed manner.

This block, in its rough state, weighed about six tons, and its present weight is about three tons. It occupied three to four months to execute the work, and the stone is worth five hundred dollars. It is to be placed over the main entrance of a splendid building now erecting in Philadelphia.

There is also to be seen, at the same place, a Lamb, cut on a solid block of granite, by the same mechanical workman.

Both these specimens are well deserving examination, showing to our citizens what can be brought forth from our granite hills, and the opportunity should be embraced to call and see them.

GRAHAM'S MAGAZINE. This number begins a new volume. It has a steel engraving of "Putnam receiving the news of the Battle of Lexington," and another of "The Coal Regions of Pennsylvania," and a third of "George Washington." It contains a great variety of articles, all interesting and agreeable, and several of permanent and historic value.

Petridge & Co. of Boston, and C. Gill & Co. of this town, are the agents.

CLAM CHOWDER. There will be a first rate chowder served up in French's Granite Saloon to-day. It will be ready in time to accommodate parties at noon, who may wish it in time for dinner. To those who are acquainted with friend French's chowders it is unnecessary to say anything; to those who are not, we would recommend an early call, and we pledge "our sacred honor," they will not be disappointed.

ACCIDENT. Mr. Seth Spear, of this town, broke his shoulder bone on Wednesday last, by falling from a load of hay.

For the Patriot.
Sticks and Straws.
After an absence of several weeks, allow me, if you please, to occupy a small space in your columns, that I may make known to all people what I saw and heard, and what I did not hear and see.

I heard a man say that the wheel of time had lost its tire; I don't credit the story, however. Summer street is to be widened in the Spring of eighteen hundred and fifty-nine. The people in that neighborhood will therefore please keep quiet and not bother the officials.

The scholars who attend the High School are loud in their praises of the cool, refreshing shade, which may be found beneath the ornamental trees planted on the school grounds, by order of the Town. They return their thanks to the committee for the beautiful manner in which they have laid out the grounds.

Now that the Canal street difficulty is likely to be settled, I would like to inquire if there is not a chance for trouble about the new street running from School street, through the Phipps place to Liberty street? Is the street exactly where it ought to be? I think not. Who can tell?

The story that Thomas Muddie was drowned while exploring the land on which the school-house is to be erected in the West District, is entirely false.

One day last week I met the Burying Ground Committee returning from the new city of the dead with a handcart load of sand, gravel, sorrel-top grass, dwarf mullen, small catnip, and a very beautiful plant of a post and rail fence,—all of which can be examined by calling at the office of the chairman. A cordial invitation to call is given to persons interested in agriculture or the fine arts.

The person who said an efficient police force would be appointed the day after the three days muster, will probably enlist in the filibustering army just previously after the thing is done. He is supposed to be one of the Know Nothings.

Tom Muddie.

For the Patriot.
New Burying Ground.

The committee appointed to lay out and adorn the field selected for a new burial place deserve the thanks of the Town. The taste displayed in plotting the grounds, and the forecast evinced in planting shrubs and trees at the earliest moment, so as to relieve that arid waste of its desolate aspect, are very commendable. Then the economy practised by them, whereby they have kept in the public treasury all the money that the Town directed should be spent on the new burial grounds, entitle them to precedence above the Selectmen, who, though reluctant to obey the commands of the Town, have obeyed some of these commands.

Summary of Intelligence.

ORIGINAL AND SELECTED.

A man, his wife, and his sister-in-law, were all lately found murdered in their beds, at Dandridge, (Md.) The bodies were terribly gashed with an axe. A slave, belonging to the murdered man, is missing, and is supposed to be the perpetrator of the deed.

The St. Louis Intelligencer learns that hundreds of Missourians have been eagerly awaiting the news of the passage of the Kansas and Nebraska territorial bills, and that a very large emigration will immediately cross the river.

At Niagara Falls, lately, a little girl, five years old, who was playing on the top of the precipice known as the Devil's Hole, approached too near, and overbalanced. For an instant she clung to bushes, but losing her hold before assistance could reach her, fell into the gulf, a distance of one hundred and fifty feet. She still survives, but her recovery is impossible.

At Cleveland, (Ohio), a favorite child, two years old, was missed by her parents, but was found five hours afterwards stripped of her elegant dress and ornaments, and wrapped in a blanket. She had been stolen for the ornaments about her person.

Owing to the refusal of the Old Colony Corporation to reduce the fare on their route, on the late Fourth of July, the Abolitionists held their customary Convention in the grove at Framingham, Worcester County, and not at Abington.

A rum-seller of Bellows Falls, evades the Vermont liquor law in this way:—He has opened a store in New Hampshire, and connected it with his Vermont house by a wire, on which jugs and orders are sent over, and liquors returned.

A farmer recommends the use of salt on onions at the rate of six bushels to the acre. Also, a liberal supply of ashes and rotted manure.

The Catholic Bishop of Buffalo (N. Y.) has excommunicated the Trustees of the Church of St. Louis, for refusing to convey its valuable property entirely to the Bishop aforesaid.

Elections are to be held in twenty-five of the States within a period of about three months. A majority of the members of the next House of Representatives are to be chosen.

There was no flag generally adopted in this country previous to the 4th of July, 1776. The different colonies had various ensigns, the most common of which were flags with stripes of white and red.

Some fiend in human shape recently placed twin babies about a week old, on the track of the railroad from Chicago to Davenport. They were discovered by the engineer of a train, which was stopped just in time to recover possession of the babies, and intends to rear them.

The heat in New York and Philadelphia on Tuesday, was intense. At Philadelphia, the mercury was 93 in the shade.

Nine thousand seven hundred and ten women, and one thousand five hundred and sixty men have been arrested in New Orleans during the past six months.

A man, free citizen of Massachusetts, and not even a slave under the institutions of a southern state, is now confined in Salem jail for no crime and no allegation of crime. He is imprisoned only for the misfortune of being unable to pay his debts.

The Know Nothing tickets for city officers have prevailed at Norfolk (Va.) and Memphis (Tenn.)

The cholera is prevailing to some extent in Boston, though confined to the foreign population and the most crowded and filthy sections.

The Hon. Gerritt Smith, Representative from the twenty-second district of New York, has resigned his seat in Congress.

The Georgetown (Ky.) Herald has appeared in mourning because its editor had been put in jail for refusing to state to the court where he got his liquor.

The venerable Thomas Ritchie of Virginia, formerly of the Richmond Enquirer and the Washington Union, died a few days since.

When the cattle train arrived at Brighton, a day or two since, seventy-one large hogs were found dead, or in a dying condition, from the effects of the heat and close stowing.

A farmer of Illinois has a farm of ten thousand acres, and has on it this year twenty-three acres of corn, which will probably yield him ninety-two thousand bushels.

The Thames Tunnel is twelve hundred feet in length; seventy-six feet below high water mark, was eight years building, and cost £446,050 pounds. Opened 25th March, 1843.

Sidney B. Williams, of the firm of Walter Baker & Co. of Boston, on his return from a business tour to the West, arrived at Montreal, where he was attacked with cholera and died in a few days.

The ship Trade Wind, of Philadelphia, from a southern port for Liverpool, was run off Cape Sable, about 26th ult., by the ship Olympus, of Boston, Capt. Wilson, from Liverpool, with nine hundred tons of iron, for Boston. Both ships sunk with a part of their crews. One account says twenty lives were lost.

The population of Ireland, according to late returns, is less than 7,000,000, of which 3,000,000 are Protestants.

The New York Herald says the daily receipts of the Crystal Palace are now doubling its expenses, and that they are constantly increasing.

In adjusting the war balances, after the peace, of 1783, Massachusetts, as was then ascertained, had overpaid her share in the sum of 1,248,801 dollars of silver money, but New York was deficient in the large amount of $2,074,846.

The debt of the consolidated city of Philadelphia is $18,000,000.

There are 1,500 negroes in San Francisco, owning property worth 1,000,000.

The true simon pure "Know Nothings" are the people who never take a newspaper.

If exercise promotes health, those who collect old bills for editors should be among the longest lived people on the earth.

The New Hampshire House of Representatives have passed resolutions against the repeal of the Missouri compromise, and disapproving of the conduct of their Congressmen who supported the repeal.

ICE CREAM!

All admit during the prevalence of the excessively hot weather the present week, that the true and proper desideratum is, how we shall keep cool. And what is most astonishing, scientific men on this subject are mute. Hence we account for the very unscientific course pursued by the vulgar—such as a dusty, tiresome, tedious drive into the country, or to the sea board; the free use of alcoholic drinks or saline draughts—to say nothing of the inflammatory speeches in Congress, or the unjustifiable use of powder and balls in the East. Things, by the way, a little opposite in their nature.

Dr. MARDEN would by no means wish to be considered singular in this matter, and yet he is absolutely compelled by force of circumstances, not only to speak, but act in accordance with convictions of truth and duty. He therefore proposes, by advice of judicious friends, to offer the public, this day, (July 8) an excellent Ice Cream, as an antidote to some of the evils complained of, and should this experiment prove successful, as he confidently believes it will, he may think the public safety will require, if not demand, a repetition hereafter about twice a week.

Quincy, July 8. 1w

The Rev. Dr. Sperry, formerly a member of the Roman Catholic Church and educated for the Priesthood, will preach at the Orthodox Church, to-morrow, (forenoon and afternoon), and will lecture at the Town Hall at 5 o'clock, P. M. Subject—Roman Catholicism.

Dr. Sperry is evidently a gentleman and scholar, and enjoys the entire confidence and respect of many of our most distinguished citizens, and we can but anticipate in his Lecture something that will be highly instructive and useful.

He proposes to give a course of Lectures on the same subject during the coming week. Introductory Lecture free.

A meeting of the Adams Literary Association will take place at their Hall, on MON. DAY EVENING next, at 7-12 o'clock. JONATHAN JAMESON, President. JAMES WHITE, Secretary.

Marriages.

In Randolph, on the 2d inst., by Rev. Mr. Cordley, Mr. Peltiah Gould of Bridgewater, to Miss Ellen A. Alden of the former place. In Boston, by Rev. Mr. Ward, Gen. Benjamin King of Abington, to Susan H. Noyes of the former place.

Deaths.

In this town, on the 5th inst., Mrs. Betsey, widow of the late Mr. Elisha Watson, aged 73 years. On the 7th inst., Mr. Moses D. Swain, aged 28 years. Funeral to-morrow afternoon, immediately after divine service, at his late residence, in Copeland street.

In Dorchester, (Port Norfolk) on the 6th inst., Mrs. Ellen, wife of Mr. John Warren, aged 20 years.

In Boston, on the 2d inst., Mary, wife of Mr. James Dolivar.

Borne on pinions like the dove, That I've left the heavenly courts above, And there, amidst the folds on her Savior's breast, She laid her down to be at rest.

Tender were the ties that bound her to earth, But still, there was one above who gave her birth; That loved one she has gone to meet, To dwell with her on God's mercy seat.

And now, methinks, Heaven's high arches ring With the anthems they together sing, Joining in that angelic band, In the far off spirit land.

Mourn not, my friends, she seems to say, That I've left the tenement of clay, But feel that I'm now free from earthly lust, My body alone reposes in the dust.

My spirit, now as free as air, Ours Heaven's richest blessings share; Mary suffers no more pain, And with her friends will meet again.

That union, how sweet 'twill be, When Heaven's portals open, and I my loved Till then I will to God you all resign, Hoping your prayer will ever be—thy will, O God, be done, not mine. E. R. T.

Guardian's Sale.
PURSUANT to a License from the Court of Probate for the County of Norfolk, granted the third day of June current, will be sold at public auction, on FRIDAY, the 14th day of July next, at 3 o'clock P. M., about 4 1/2 acres of Land in Quincy, bounded southerly, westerly and northerly on land of Hon. C. F. Adams, and easterly on land of Isaac and Hon. Bass.

Also—A lot of Land bounded westerly on land of said Adams, easterly and southerly on land of Lewis Bass, and northerly on a private way leading from Granite street to the first named land, being about one-sixth of an acre.

Also—Another lot, about one-eighth of an acre, bounded easterly on Granite street, westerly on land of Lewis Bass, and northerly on said private way.

The above is part of the Homestead of the late Isaac Bass, and is well situated for building purposes or cultivation.

QUINCY PATRIOT,

Granite Quarries, &c.

Three valuable Granite Quarries and fifty acres of unimproved Granite Ledges,
On WEDNESDAY, July 12th,
At 4 o'clock P. M., on the premises,
WILL be sold at public auction, for the purpose of closing up the unsettled estate of Josiah Bass, deceased—

One Quarry of very excellent Granite, containing about four acres, being the same now worked by Messrs. Frederick & Field, and which is under a lease of those gentlemen, that expires on the 1st of April next. The quarry is said to be the best in the State. The granite is of beautiful color, and splits into fine large blocks.

Also—One other Granite Quarry, containing about four acres, being the same lately worked by the Messrs. Hardwick. The Stone in this Ledge is of good color and very easily got out.

Also—One other Granite Quarry, containing about four acres, being the same now worked by the Messrs. Newcomb. This is considered to be an exceedingly valuable quarry. The Stone is of very fine color, and easily got out. There are good roads leading to the above named quarries, and they are all very easy of access.

Also—About fifty acres of unimproved and unimproved Granite Ledges, containing inexhaustible quantities of Stone. These Ledges adjoin the three quarries above named, and undoubtedly contain stone equally valuable. They are easy of access on all sides, and will be sold in lots of five acres each, or of all together, at the option of purchasers. This will afford an opportunity to persons of small means, who may wish to work their own quarry, to secure one which will afford constant and profitable employment, and at the same time be increasing in value every day. It will also afford to capitalists a favorable chance for profitable investment.

Persons wishing to examine the property before the sale, may do so at any time on application to JOSIAH BASS, at Quincy, (Mass.)
N. A. THOMPSON of Boston, Auct.

Healy vs. William W. Healy—Thomas B.
Porter et al. vs. William W. Healy and Alexander Sherman vs. William W. Healy—and will be sold by Public Auction on the tenth day of July next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, on the premises, in Beantown, all the right in equity which the said William W. Healy had on the second day of January last, at 5 o'clock, afternoon, it being the time the same was attached on mesne process, the following described mortgaged
Real Estate, viz:—
About thirteen thousand five hundred and sixty-six feet of Land, with the buildings thereon, standing and being lot No. 12, on a plan of lots drawn by S. Dwight Eaton, and recorded with the Norfolk Deeds, at the end of Vol. 189.
Conditions made known at the sale.
SILAS BINNEY, Deputy Sheriff.
June 10.

Lost,
ON Friday evening, April 28th, on Granite
Street, between the residence of Messrs. B.
Bartlett and Goodnow's Building, a FINE
TIPPET. The finder of the same will be ambly rewarded by leaving it at Mrs. Bartlett's or AT THIS OFFICE.

New Tailoring Goods.
J. A. HOLDEN,
WOULD inform the inhabitants of Quincy and vicinity, that he has Just Replenished his Stock, with a choice selection of Goods, suitable for SPRING and SUMMER.

He invites the attention of such as expect punctuality and good workmanship, for cash only, such being his rule of business, and the reduced rates at which he sells, rendering any other mode of doing business impracticable.

His clothes will always be made with all his care and skill, of which he boasts so; leaving the garments made by his hands to ADVERTISE THEMSELVES. Those students to combine elegance with economy, will do well and wisely to favor him with a call.

Remember he is not to be understood by any other establishment, style, quality and finish considered.

How I Lost my First Love.

I was in love—deeply, passionately in love. It was my first plunge, and it was a deep one. The lovely—enchancing—the peerless Amanda Louisa Smithers had conquered my virgin affections and made them the slaves of her will.

I was not much in the world's goods; my income was inconveniently limited; but I was rich in Hope. Like Mr. Micawber, I felt confident that "something would turn up," and in anticipation of this something I determined on the first opportunity to propose to the object of my adoration, that she should share with me in the enjoyment of my expected good fortune.

The opportunity at length offered itself. It was on a cold frosty evening that I brushed my carefully preserved dress coat, and particularly tight "unwhisperables," and then gently dusted my hat with my own handkerchief.

I then studied my appearance in the cracked mirror, with considerable anxiety, pulling up my vest collar and twitching my neck-tie round in order to conceal the fact that I wore that much ridiculed article of attire—a diekey.

It must not be supposed that I only boasted of one shirt. Far from it. The fact was, the landress and myself having had some difficulty about the payment of some washing money—alleged to be her due—she had for the last fortnight kept my other shirt as a pledge for future payment, so I was fain to hide the dubious hue of my linen under the aforesaid diekey.

At length I was satisfied as to the integrity of my breast work; so gently stroking my moustache, (purchased a few days previously at a hair dresser's,) I strutted out to meet my Amanda.

On that very night I had determined to "do, or die!" and the hapless swain who has at length made up his mind to "pop" the fatal question, can alone appreciate the excessive nervousness I felt as I approached the place of meeting—her father's garden door.

She was there awaiting me, and with a sinking at my heart that I never before experienced, I offered her my arm. As we strolled along I cast about in my mind for some means to declare my love to her; but as often as the words came in my mouth, "I gulped" and swallowed them, once or twice nearly strangling myself in the effort.

At last, just as I had almost decided on postponing it to some other time, she stopped abruptly and asked me if I was ill.

I plucked up my remaining courage for the attack.

"My—my dear Amanda—I am not sick, thank you," I replied—abruptly breaking down in the speech I had commenced making, and feeling all over very much as if I was a confounded goose.

"You certainly must be sick," persisted Amanda.

"The fact is," I said, with desperate energy, "that I—I love you!"

I felt now as if I was still a goose, but with the added sensation of roasting before a very hot fire. Finding she made no reply, I determined to go through with it, if I died in the attempt.

"Yes, my dearest Amanda Louisa—I love you passionately—devotedly." I was about dropping on one knee, but a reflection on the tightness of my dress at that point deterred me. "Without your blessed society, I should die. Shall I have thee—can I hope—will you be mine?"

As with a huge effort I jerked forth the awful question, I felt as if I had been plunged into an icy bath, and that the cold liquid was running through me from the top of my head to the toe of my boots. It was the decisive "plunge" of my life—and it almost took away my breath.

Amanda Louisa blushed, and leaned rather heavily on my arm. At length she whispered that she would "see to-morrow."

The ice being now broken, my old boldness returned, together with my confidence in the future. I rattled away where we could get a first rate house; speculated on the advisability of keeping a carriage; promised Amanda an infinitude of dresses and jewelry; consulted as to the best place for a tour during the honeymoon, and in fact talked her and myself into belief that I was a man of property.

I had got so far as to arrange who should be present at the ceremony, and what I should wear, when—confound all icy paths and heedless walking—I suddenly found myself seated in the lap of mother earth, and was suddenly conscious of the actual contact of a sensitive portion of my frame with the frozen ground. Those tight pants!

I sprung up, and hastily endeavored to conceal my mishap by grasping my scanty coat-tails to keep them together. The fates were against me.

In the expressive language of the multitude "it was no go."

The too sympathizing Amanda insisted on it that I was hurt, and then would brush the dirt from my coat. I declined the offer, but she was resolute.

I will take your pocket handkerchief to brush the dirt off. You ought not wear it so far out of your pocket, some day it will be stolen."

"Oh!" I exclaimed, as I felt a twitch, "oh, don't!"

"Dear me," she remarked, as she made another tug, "do you keep your handkerchief pinned to your pocket?"

Just then the moon, which had been playing bo-peep behind a cloud, shone out to thoroughly expose my misery. The true state of the case at once flashed across her mind. The contrast between the lower part of the supposed upper part of the same article of dress also revealed another unpleasant truth. With the dignity of an offended queen she remarked cuttingly—

"If your heart is as false as your shirt bosom, sir, it would be folly for me to repose confidence in you. I can find my way home alone."

I turned to her with an imploring look and was about to commence a deprecating speech, when the anger of the faithless Amanda gave way to a sudden explosion of merriment, and she skinned home like a swallow.

Started at her behavior, I gazed after her like one petrified.

Another suspicion quickly crossed my brain like a burning flash as it passed. I clasped my hands to my upper lip.

It was even so. With the shock of my fall, one side of my moustache had fallen off.

I fled from the village, and did not return until I heard that Amanda Louisa had married a military officer, whose wardrobe included twenty-five ruffled, b. some shirts of unimpeachable integrity, and who sported a splendid moustache—of his own growth!

The False Step.

"Come, James, go with me to buy some matches. Mr. Bradley wants some," said Joseph Wright to his schoolmate one night after school.

"I am busy," returned James; "can't you go alone?"

"Oh, I want you to go; I am going to buy something. Mr. Bradley gave me a ten-cent piece, and told me if I would get a paper of matches and three cent's worth of charcoal, I might have the rest. So I'll buy a top with the sixpence."

And so pleased was Joseph with his speculation, that he took out his money to look at it again.

"James, look here!" he exclaimed in astonishment, as he held up a glittering golden coin.

"Mr. Bradley has given it to you by mistake," said James. "How much is it?"

"A quarter eagle! What a lucky fellow I am!"

"But you will not change that for four cents! We must go back to Mr. Bradley, and tell him."

"Go back and tell him? Why the money is mine; he gave it to me."

"But he did not know it was gold, so it was not yours. You surely will return it."

"I surely will not do such a thing. He gave me the money and said that after buying the coal and matches I might have what was left; so it is mine, you see."

"I do not see, Joseph. Mr. Bradley made a mistake, I am sure. The blinds of the school room were closed; he did not see it was gold he was giving you, and the size deceived him."

"Well that is his affair, not mine. If he made a mistake, it was his misfortune and my gain. But say nothing about it, and I will give you a dollar of the money. Mr. Bradley will never know it."

"What would you have me do, Joseph! It is dishonest, and I cannot join you in robbing my good teacher."

"Robbing! It is not robbing, for the money is mine; I tell you he gave it to me. But hark you James, don't you say a word about this to Mr. Bradley, for if you do, your head will not be worth the wearing."

"I will not promise you that, Joseph, for I think it is wrong to conceal such a thing; and if Mr. Bradley asks me anything about it, I cannot tell him a falsehood. But why will you not do right, and return the money? Mr. Brown will know something is wrong when you offer him two and a half dollars to pay for three cents' worth of charcoal."

"I will not offer it. I have four cents in my pocket which will just pay for what I get. But remember you say not a word about this to any one."

"Well Joseph, if you are bent on doing wrong, I will not go with you; for it would not be right in me to go. I wish you would go back to Mr. Bradley."

Joseph turned away, and James finding further remonstrance useless, went home, sad and troubled. It seemed that he ought to tell Mr. Bradley, and yet he dreaded to be a tale bearer. At length he resolved to tell his mother, and ask her advice.

On reaching home, he found his uncle and cousins from Ohio had arrived at his father's house on a visit. In the joy and excitement of the several days following, Joseph was forgotten, and when James again went to school, he supposed the matter was all discovered and settled, so he said nothing about it.

This incident, trifling as it may seem, exerted a great influence on the character of the two boys in after life. James was strengthened in correct principles, and whenever any temptations arose, the thought of the quarter-eagle came up to banish them.

Joseph, on the contrary, might date his ruin from that evening.

It so happened that Mr. Bradley lost his pocket book the next day, as he was passing through the crowded streets of the city in which he lived, and supposing it contained the quarter eagle, he never thought of asking Joseph about it.

Having succeeded so well this time, the misguided boy grew more and more avaricious, and his better principles rapidly gave way to his inordinate love of gain. Naturally very quick and shrewd, he managed to escape detection. While quite young he obtained the situation of teller in a bank, and obliged to render a strict account of all moneys which passed through his hands, he was forced to be honest for a time.

One day a gentleman called at the bank and said to him: "There was a slight mistake in the money I received on a check yesterday. Your package of $1000, contained only $990, and I have called to see if you would rectify the mistake."

"I am very sorry for you, sir," returned Joseph, "but our rule is, all mistakes must be rectified before leaving the bank."

"Most I then lose the ten dollars?" asked the gentleman.

"I suppose you must; it is not our loss."

"It is very hard," returned the gentleman. "I did not count the money, for I am so accustomed to dealing with banks, and this is the first time I ever saw a mistake in them."

"Very sorry, sir; but we cannot help you," said Joseph, turning away.

In a short time the bank was noted for its mistakes. When people took the precaution to count the money before leaving, mistakes were promptly and cheerfully rectified, with the excuse that there had been a change in tellers, or he had been ill or absent, and a person unaccustomed to the business had taken his place for a time.

"I wish to deposit $1,500 this morning," said Mr. Wise, a gentleman who dealt extensively with the bank.

Joseph ran over the bills rapidly, then paused, colored, and counted again, but more slowly. "I beg your pardon, sir," he said, "but I make only $1,480. Will you count with me?"

They counted once, twice, three times; but there was a deficit of twenty dollars. Mr. Wise looked confused. "I cannot see how I made such a mistake, for I counted it twice myself this morning; but here is a twenty to make up the full amount," he continued, laying another bill on the pile.

Complaints increased; but no one could find fault, for all mistakes discovered in the bank were, as usual, promptly rectified, and where deposits were found deficient, the owner counted for himself, and saw his error, as in the case of Mr. Wise.

"Wright, said this gentleman, "you gave me what you called a hundred dollar package this morning, but it contained only ninety-five."

"Well, Mr. Wise, you made a worse mistake than that the other day," said Joseph, coloring; "you made a deficit of twenty dollars."

"Yes, and handed over a twenty when I saw my error. I hope you will do the same. We would be glad to oblige you, but we must adhere to our rule, and rectify mistakes only before leaving the bank."

Mr. Wise was a shrewd, far-sighted man. The peculiar look and manner of Joseph when mistakes were discovered had not escaped his notice, and this, together with the fact that until he was employed no mistakes had occurred, led him to believe that so many errors were not the result of accident. He therefore employed three friends to count with him a sum of money which he intended to deposit, and, after expressing his doubts of the teller's honesty, communicated a plan to detect him.

The next day the four met, as strangers at the bank. "I wish to make a deposit this morning," Mr. Wright, said Wise, throwing down the package carelessly, and, taking a letter from his pocket, began to read.

"How much do you make?" he asked after a time.

"Four hundred and eighty-five dollars."

"I am getting careless, it seems. I thought there were five hundred," returned Mr. Wise, throwing down fifteen dollars.

At that moment the three friends presented checks. Wright's fingers flew over the package of bills before him, and as he handed them the money, a small paper fell from his coat sleeve, which was instantly seized by Mr. Ellis, one of the three. On examination it proved to be a ten dollar bill, marked with the name of Mr. Wise, part of the very five hundred dollars which he had purposely marked and deposited that morning.

In three months from that time Joseph Wright was an inmate of the state prison, convicted of fraud, and of embezzling money from the bank. Losses for which no one could account were traced to him, and, in the prime of life, he was condemned to the felon's cell.

Childish Sincerity.

A lady who was quite in the habit of dropping in at her neighbors about meal-time, in the hope of obtaining an invitation to partake with the family, was recently completely nonplussed by the unhesitating frankness of a child.

Knowing that a neighbor's supper-bour was five, she called in about four, and settled herself down for a long call.

"It takes two to make a bargain," and the lady honored with the call had no idea of giving an invitation, if it was in her power to escape it.

Accordingly the hour of five brought no indications of supper. Time wore on, the sun was near its setting, and still the same. A little girl, the daughter of the lady in question, began to grow quite uneasy. At length, her mother having gone out for a moment, the visitor said—

"You must come over and see me, Mary, some time."

"No, I won't," said the child.

"Why not?"

"Because I don't like you."

"But why don't you like me?"

"Because I'm hungry, and want some supper."

"But," said the visitor, amazed, "I don't prevent you having your supper, do I?"

"Yes, you do," said little Mary. "Mother said she shouldn't have supper till you were gone, if you staid till midnight."

It less than five minutes the visitor was marching out of the front door with a very red face. She hasn't called to see Mary's mother since.

Little Mary, in her childish frankness, has not yet learned the important lesson which after years will not fail to teach her, viz: that "the truth, however excellent or desirable in itself, is not to be spoken at all times."

The Apple Tree Borer.

The following remarks relative to this insect so destructive to our apple trees, we take from the Massachusetts Ploughman, whose editor has given the subject more attention, perhaps, than any other writer:—

With the return of July, we are again to expect the return of the borer that causes so much mischief among apple trees. For nearly fifteen years we have annually exhibited a portrait of the fly that lays her eggs at the root of the trees about the first of July, where they are hatched, and where they find an easy entrance into the body of the trees.

We have spent much time in the investigation of this subject, which attracted but little attention of our farmers in the interior at the time when we first commenced the publication of a paper, and we are well satisfied that we are correct in the statements which we have made at various times, as we find no one who can controvert them.

The borer then is a worm produced by the mother fly, whose imago may be seen at the head of our article.

This fly lays her eggs, generally at the roots of the tree, which she means to have her offspring live upon, because at the roots the bark is more tender and the young worms there find an easy entrance.

This fly never appears till about the first of July, and as she lays her eggs during that month, and at no other time, we are able to give directions which may be relied upon, to destroy the very eggs before they are hatched.

We now advise all—and particularly those who suspect that their apple trees are diseased through "atmospheric influence"—to look at the roots of their trees in July, and apply something that may destroy the young worms before they make an entrance.

If ley from potash or wood ashes may seem too strong, put on dish water or any thing that you know is strong enough to kill them before they enter. But kill them at any rate before they ruin your trees.

We have no faith in dish water or any other weak solutions to kill these worms or the eggs that hold them. Give them a drink of good strong potash water—ley that will just bear up an egg, and depend on it you will not injure a tree, but you will kill the borers.

July is the month when this should be attended to, as the worms soon work into the tree and bury themselves under the bark during the first season. There are days in July when the day is not drying and when the apple trees may be attended to as well as at any season.

Unlucky Friday.

The belief in lucky and unlucky days is one of the most prevalent superstitions, and may be traced to remote nations of antiquity. It would be difficult to say why Friday more than any other day has been esteemed unlucky, but it may have arisen from the fact that Christ was crucified on that day. The anniversary of the crucifixion, Good Friday, is observed by all Catholics with prayer and penance. The Venetians were the first to execute criminals on Friday, under the notion that the expiration of a crime on the day on which Christ suffered would make the criminal more acceptable in the sight of the Redeemer. The Venetians also prohibited their soldiers from fighting and their ships from sailing on Friday, fearful that ill luck would attend such enterprises. From the Adriatic this custom gradually spread over the Catholic world, until it arrived in England, from whence it was brought to this country.

In nearly all Europe, criminals are executed on Friday; and, in this country, the custom is, we believe, universally prevalent. Seamen generally dislike going to sea on Friday, alleging that voyages commenced on that day are apt to be disastrous. Some captains, in order to show the fallacy of this notion, have made a point of sailing on Friday, and, of course, have met with good luck in some instances, and bad luck in others. The latter, however, have been more treasured up by sailors. One of the most successful whaling voyages recently made was that performed by a vessel from one of the New England ports, which sailed on Friday, and experienced nearly all its good luck on that day. The belief in unlucky days is undoubtedly a gross superstition, and yet many singular accounts of wonderful coincidences have been related. The same day of the month has not unfrequently been the day of birth and death of distinguished men, or that upon which some memorable act of their life occurred.

Alexander the Great was born on the 6th of April, and on that day of the same month, won two of his most important victories. He died also on his birth day. His father, Philip, conquered Ptolema on the 6th of April; and on that day, Parmentia, Phillip's general, overcame the Illyrians. Augustus was adopted by Julius Caesar on the 19th of August, and died on the anniversary of that event. Raphael was born and died on Good Friday. Shakespeare also died on his birthday—April 23d. The 24th of February was thrice memorable to Charles V. of Spain, as the day of his birth, the day of his victory over Francis, King of France, and the day on which he received the imperial crown.

These coincidences, however, like many others that might be enumerated, do not demonstrate any thing in our opinion, to strengthen the popular fallacy of unlucky days. —New York Sunday Times.

Lifetime of Man.

When the world was created, and all creatures assembled to have their lifetime appointed, the ass first advanced, and asked how long he would have to live? "Thirty years," replied Nature; "will that be agreeable to thee?" "Alas!" answered the ass, "it is a long while! Remember what a wretched existence will be mine; from morning until night I shall have to bear heavy burdens, dragging corn sacks to the mill, that others may eat bread, while I shall have no encouragement, nor be refreshed by anything, but blows and kicks. Give but a portion of that time, I pray!" Nature was moved with compassion, and presented but eighteen years. The ass went away comforted, and the dog came forward. "How long dost thou require to live?" asked Nature. "Thirty years were too many for the ass, but wilt thou be contented with them?" "Is it thy will that I should?" replied the dog. "Think how much I shall have to run about; my feet will not last for so long a time, and when I shall have lost my voice for barking, and my teeth for biting, what else shall I be fit for but to lie in a corner and growl?" Nature thought he was right, and gave him twelve years. The ape then appeared. "Thou wilt, doubtless, willingly live the thirty years," said Nature; "thou wilt not have to labor as the ass and the dog. Life will be pleasant to thee." "Ah, no!" cried he, "so it may seem to others, but it will not be! I shall play merry tricks, and excite laughter by my grimaces, and then be rewarded with a sour apple. How often sorrow lies concealed behind a jest! I shall not be able to endure for thirty years." Nature was gracious, and he received but ten. At last came man, healthy and strong, and asked the measure of his days. "Will thirty years content thee?" "How short a time!" exclaimed man. "When I shall have built my house, and kindled a fire on my own hearth; when the trees I shall have planted are about to bloom and bear fruit; when life will seem to me most desirable, I shall die! O Nature, grant me a longer period!" "Thou shalt have the eighteen years of the ass beside." "That is not enough," replied man. "Take likewise the twelve years of the dog." "It is not yet sufficient," reiterated man. "Give me more!" "I give thee then the ten years of the ape; in vain wilt thou claim more!" Man departed unsatisfied. Thus man lives seventy years. The first thirty are his human years, and pass swiftly by. He is then healthy and happy—he labors cheerfully and rejoices in his existence. The eighteen years of the ass come next, and burden upon burden is heaped upon him; he carries the corn that is to feed others; blows and kicks are the wages of his faithful service. The twelve years of the dog follow, and he loses his teeth, and lies in the corner and growls. When these are gone, the ape's ten years form the conclusion. Then man, weak and silly, becomes the sport of children. —Translated from the German.

The Slanderer.

The slanderer is a pest, an incubus to society, that should be subjected to a slow cauterization, and then be topped off like a disagreeable excrescence. Like the viper, he leaves a shining trail in his wake. Like a tarantula, he weaves a thread of candor with a web of wiles, or with all the mendacity of hints, whispers forth his tale, that, "like the fabled Nile, no fountain knows." The dead—aye even the dead—over whose pale sheeted corpse sleeps the dark sleep no venomous tongue can wake, and whose pale lips have then no voice to plead, are subjected to the scandalous attacks of the slanderer—

Who wears a mask the Gorgon would disown, A check of parchment, and an e of stone!

I think it is Pollock who says the slanderer is the foulest whelp of sin, whose tongue was set on fire in hell, and whose legs were faint with haste to propagate the lie his soul had framed.

He has a lip of lies, a face furrowed to conceal, That, without feeling, mocks at those who feel.

There is no animal I despise more than these moths and scorpions of society, the malicious censurers—foul slanders, in thine own dark, raven-plumage soul distilled—

Blush—if of honest blood a drop remains
To stain its way along the vein!
Blush—if the bronze line hardened on thy cheek
Has left one spot where that poor drop can speak.

BORN TO NO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE.

The Adams Literary Association.
It gives us pleasure to remark upon the success of this Association. The number of its members is larger than ever before. The Library contains several hundred volumes of historical, biographical and miscellaneous works. Donations of books have been made to them by several gentlemen. Our Representative in Congress has been very liberal to them. He has sent them many very valuable Congressional documents. The library is not without works of poetry and fiction. We think no one who feels an interest in the Society and has contributed in any way to its establishment and support, has any reason to complain of the manner in which the Society has been conducted, and of the disposition which has been made of contributions to it.

The newly elected officers will not, we are convinced, allow the confidence of the community in the Association to be impaired, during their term of office.

We would suggest to the Association the propriety of making an effort to increase the number of the Association, and extend its usefulness by changing the place of its meetings to some point more central. Such an Association should embrace all the young men of the town. It should not be local and sectional. Every thing generous and manly is poisoned and withers under the operation of local and sectional feelings. We say these things from a sincere regard for the Association, and from an earnest desire for its permanency and its highest usefulness. Nor are we ignorant that there are, at present, among its members, young men from other sections of the town than the one in which the meetings are held.

The Association is now well established. It has a fine library of entertaining and instructive works, the number of its members is large, and its officers are pledged to its future good management and prosperity by their efforts in the past to found and support it. Let them enlarge the circle of its influence by making it free and of easy access to all the young men in town.

Webster's Dictionary.

We have received pamphlets from time to time touching the claims of Webster's and Worcester's Dictionaries. As to the relative merits of these works we are incompetent to decide. There is scarcely a page in either but contains words we never saw or heard of. It is conceded, we believe, that Webster's Dictionary excels in the precision and fulness of its definitions. It is claimed for Worcester's Dictionary, that it excels in correctness of orthography and pronunciation. Dr. Webster has attempted to simplify the spelling of words. We should think about half of the letters which make up words might be left out, but we would not decide. Dr. Worcester adheres to the ancient ways. Dr. Webster, in orthography, might be called a progressive; Dr. Worcester a conservative, or in other words, the former has a little of Young America in him, the latter is a fine classic old Fogie.

The friends of Dr. Webster claim that his pronunciation is after the manner of the best speakers of England—of the Pulpit and Parliament;—and further say that the pronunciation adopted by Worcester is borrowed from the stage. If these things are so, we should prefer the pronunciation of Dr. Worcester—provided we can form any opinion of the pronunciation of the Divines and Members of Parliament of England, and by the pronunciation of Members of Congress and Divines in this country.

We certainly would prefer the pronunciation of Mrs. Siddons and Garrick to that of the muffled Archbishop of Canterbury, or to that of Lord John Russell, whose claim to distinction is not in his own energies and genius as theirs were, but in the credit of his kindred and friends, the heroic actions of his ancestors and in the ancient lustre of his family. The pronunciation of our members of Congress, or of the boozey beef-eating country squire of England—think of such a standard—how barbarous.

We close as we began, by saying we are incompetent to decide on their respective merits. If we could have but one we should prefer Webster. It has been received with favor in Great Britain, and has been adopted generally in this country as the standard Dictionary by the schools and institutions of learning, so we are informed. Unity of orthography and pronunciation is desirable, and as for definitions its claims to excellence, we believe, is not denied by the friends of Worcester.

Ice-Cream. Those who desire to take an ice cream today, can gratify their appetite at Dr. Marden's.

CONGRESS. Our National Legislature has voted to adjourn. Good. It will meet again in December. The next session will be a short one—only three months. Many of the members will then go to a long home in oblivion. The administration will probably have to work its passage during the last two years of its term, against an opposition House. We hope to see the crushers, crushed—the invaders of State rights, repelled and overthrown—the despotism of Democracy shivered into atoms, against the firm bulwarks of State Rights and State Sovereignty.

A HISTORY OF COBA. M. M. Ballou, Esq., editor of Gleason's Pictorial, is writing a faithful History of this "Eden of the Gulf," from copious notes taken on the island. A more timely book, at the present moment, could not be produced, and Mr. Ballou is able, from long editorial habits of observation and description, to do the subject full justice. Messrs. Phillips, Sampson & Co. of Boston, will issue the work in a few days, handsomely illustrated.

PIC NIC EXCURSION. The Sunday School connected with Rev. Dr. Lunt's church are making preparations to go to Hingham to enjoy an afternoon in the beautiful grove adjoining the Old Colony House.

She was my hope, as I have said,
But hope like mine are fleeting;
For when I whispered, "I love thee,"
She told me that I must repair forthwith
To the extensive Furniture establishment of Savil & Co., and purchase sufficient to "set up" house-keeping in good shape, if I wished her hand in marriage, otherwise I might stop my bleating.

GRAPES AND PEACHES. At the last weekly exhibition at the Horticultural Society's rooms, in Boston, there were some most luscious grapes from Apollos Vales of Randolph, and a few mammoth and well ripened peaches from C. S. Holbrook of East Randolph.

CLAM CHOWDER. Lovers of this favorite dish will bear in mind that it can be had as usual this afternoon, at the Granite Saloon, in French style.

A GRATIFYING TESTIMONIAL. The following letter, says the New York Commercial Advertiser, from the Hon. Abbott Lawrence, formerly United States Minister to Great Britain, to Freeman Hunt, Esq., editor and proprietor of the Merchants' Magazine, speaks of that work in terms of high eulogium, but in terms too eulogistic, for it is unquestionably not only unique in design, but is conducted with rare ability and judgment, and teems with commercial information. The next issue of the magazine will commence the sixteenth volume:—

Boston, June 10th, 1854.

My Dear Sir—I have often had occasion, not only at home, but during my residence abroad, to refer to the "Merchants' Magazine" for information, upon questions of importance to the interests of our country, and beg to say that I am not acquainted with any publication that contains so much information upon the subject of our great national economy. I deem this periodical of value not only to the merchant, but to the statesman, diplomatist, jurist, manufacturer, mechanic, agriculturist, and national economist. In fact, it is a brief compendium of knowledge out of which all classes, occupations and professions may obtain something useful to themselves, or to our common country, and to the world at large.

The liberal principles upon which this magazine has been conducted, most, I think, recommend it to the consideration and patronage of the public. I assure you of my best wishes for a circulation of this unrivaled periodical, commensurate with its merits, and your own reasonable expectations.

I am, dear sir,
Very sincerely, your obed't serv't.
ABBOTT LAWRENCE.
TO FREEMAN HUNT, Esq.

LOVE AFFAIR. A most tragical affair occurred in East Abington on Tuesday morning last, as we learn from the North Bridgewater Gazette. It seems that Isaac P. Nash, a young man, hired a horse and chaise on Monday, promising to return, if alive and well, on Tuesday, at seven o'clock. On that morning, the horse and carriage were found secured at the north end of Reed's dam, and at the south end of the dam were found a coat, vest and hat, two shawls and a bonnet, all carefully folded up and placed near the water. About two rods from the shore, two bodies were discovered, which on examination, proved to be those of Nash and a girl named Adrianna Sampson, from Pembroke, to whom Nash has been paying attention. They were lashed together with a rope, and a note left requesting burial in the same position.

CHOLERA. Several deaths have occurred from cholera, in Boston, during the present week, principally among persons who disregarded cleanliness and were not very correct in their way of living.

Hon. Abel Cushing, one of the Police Judges, has partially recovered from an attack which he doubtless contracted while in the discharge of his judicial duties.

Joseph Cleverly, Jr., of Abington, died of cholera, on Sunday last, after thirty hours of sickness.

THE DORCHESTER OUTRAGE. A town meeting has been held in Dorchester, to take action upon the outrage committed on the night of the 3d inst., by which the new Catholic church was destroyed. Lewis Pierce was chosen Moderator. The resolutions passed at the meeting of the citizens of Dorchester and Milton Lower Mills, were adopted as an expression of the sentiments of the town. Another resolution, introduced by Rev. Thomas B. Fox, was also unanimously adopted, as follows:—

Resolved, That the selectmen be requested and authorized to adopt such measures as in their opinion may be necessary, to ascertain the facts in relation to the outrage committed on the building in process of erection at the Lower Mills Village, for a Catholic Church; and to offer a reward not exceeding $500 for the detection and conviction of the authors of said outrage, if satisfied that it was lawless and criminally perpetrated by any party or parties.

Resolved, That the selectmen be requested and authorized to adopt such measures as in their opinion may be necessary, to ascertain the facts in relation to the outrage committed on the building in process of erection at the Lower Mills Village, for a Catholic Church; and to offer a reward not exceeding $500 for the detection and conviction of the authors of said outrage, if satisfied that it was lawless and criminally perpetrated by any party or parties.

DEATH OF AN EDITOR. Elbridge G. Robinson, Esq., for many years editor and proprietor of the Norfolk Democrat, at Dedham, died on Tuesday morning last, at the age of forty-nine years. His disease was rheumatism combined with erysipelas.

For the Patriot.
School Vacations.

Mr. Editor,—The time has nearly arrived when our schools are to have their annual summer vacations. It had been the custom in this town, until last year, to have but three weeks, when the Committee made a move in the right direction and increased it to four weeks. Public opinion now demands of them to take another step in the "march of progress," and increase it to six weeks.

Most of our colleges now keep students at study only forty weeks in the year; and certainly, children are able to study no more time than the students in college, whose minds are more mature, and better able to endure it. It is a relic of barbarism to keep the children in the primary schools confined over thirty-six weeks. If we have no higher view of a school than to look on it as a place where we can send our children, to keep them out of the way, we may dispense with vacations entirely; but most of the people in this town are too intelligent to look upon schools in that light, consequently, I say, public opinion demands that the children rest and play six weeks, from July 21st.

We know no reason why any of our teachers should object to this arrangement, unless some of them take more pleasure in using cowhides than having vacations.

ICE CREAM!

All admit during the prevalence of the excessively hot weather the present week, that the true and proper desideratum is, how we shall keep cool. And what is most astonishing, scientific men on this subject are mute. Hence we account for the very unscientific course pursued by the vulgar—such as a dusty, tiresome, tedious drive into the country, or to the sea board; the free use of alcoholic drinks or saline draughts—to say nothing of the inflammatory speeches in Congress, or the unjustifiable use of powder and balls in the East. Things, by the way, a little opposite to their nature.

Dr. MARDEN would by no means wish to be considered singular in this matter, and yet he is absolutely compelled by force of circumstances, not only to speak, but act in accordance with convictions of truth and duty. He therefore proposes, by advice of judicious friends, to offer the public, this day, (July 15) an excellent Ice Cream, as an antidote to some of the evils complained of, and should this experiment prove successful, as he confidently believes it will, he may think the public safety will require, if not demand, a repetition hereafter about twice a week.

and smiles it all away. Not so with that upon the brow of the tottering veteran. There is no Spring whose warmth can penetrate its eternal frost. It came to stay. Its single flakes fell unnoticed—and now it is drilled there. We shall see it increase until we lay the old man in his grave. There it shall be absorbed by the eternal darkness—for there is no age in heaven.

Yet why speak of age in a mournful strain. It is beautiful, honorable, eloquent. Should we sigh at the proximity of death, when life and the world are so full of emptiness? Let the old exult because they are old—if any must weep, let it be the young, at the long succession of cares that are before them. Welcome the snow—for it is the emblem of peace and of rest. It is but a temporal crown, which shall fall at the gates of Paradise, to be replaced by a brighter and a better.

"BORN TO NO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE."

SALES OF REAL ESTATE IN QUINCY. The heirs of the late Josiah Bass, deceased, sold on the 12th inst., at public auction, the Granite Quarry, now improved by Messrs. Frederick and Field, on Quincy Common, to those gentlemen, for $3900. Other portions of land contiguous (over fifty acres) belonging to the same heirs, were put up at auction at a limited price, but found no bidders. Our worthy Selectman, Mr. Horatio N. Glover, sold a few days since, some seven or eight acres of land, near his residence, on Squantum street, Quincy, at $1000 per acre, to Enoch Train, Esq., the eminent Boston merchant. As the land extends from the street easterly to Quincy Bay, it is not improbable, Mr. Train contemplates the location of shipyard. Other sales of real estate have been made to good advantage the present season, in different parts of the town, which are good indications of the prosperity of Quincy.

SUCIDR. An inquest was held on Wednesday last, by Lewis Bass, Esq., Coroner, on the body of B. F. Cushing, eighteen years of age, who lived with Mr. Richard Billings as an apprentice at the cabinet business. He was found drowned near Squantum, and his coat and vest laid on a rock near his body. He was highly esteemed by Mr. Billings, and sustained an excellent character. The young man's father died the previous week at Dorchester, very suddenly, being sick only two days, which caused him great depression of mind and deep melancholy, under the influence of which he was probably induced to commit suicide. The verdict of the jury was in accordance with the above circumstances. The young man has left a widowed mother, and brothers and sisters, who in one short week have been brought into great affliction, which feelingly reminds us of the frail tenure of all earthly possessions and hopes.

MUSTER FIELD. The ground for the military review is just west of Mt. Wellington. The town will be deluged with ram-drinkers, blacklegs, and all sorts of scoundrels; and therefore it becomes the Selectmen to appoint extra police for the protection of property and security of individuals. It is true the town was not paid by the State for the services of extra police to keep order on and near the training field at the review near Squantum. Let the military preserve order on their own field as best they can. But let police be appointed for different sections of the town.

PANIC IN RAILROAD STOCKS. It is but a year or two ago, that there was a great convulsion in England among the holders of railroad stock. The bubble having become too much inflated, burst. Hudson the Railroad King, was dethroned. Large losses were made. Families were reduced to poverty. Executives of managers of railroads were brought to light, and at last matters settled quietly into their proper positions. The country seems now to be undergoing a similar experiment. There is now great distrust of railroad stocks and securities. Robert Schuyler of New York, having proved false to his trust, and having fraudulently issued shares of stock in the New York and New Haven Corporation has produced a sort of panic. Suspicion has fallen upon all railroad management.

TWO THINGS SHOULD BE DONE. First.—The Town should employ some competent person to transcribe the records of the Town of Braintree from its settlement, or from the first register of official transactions that can be found down to the time when a portion of Braintree was set off and incorporated as the Town of Quincy.

Second.—The Town should procure a large fire-proof safe, for the preservation of its records, papers and written instruments of every kind. They are exposed to danger and destruction by fire at present, and their loss would be a calamity that every intelligent man would regret.

HOT WEATHER. The heat for the last few days has been almost insufferable—mercury 100 in the shade.

Death of Elbridge G. Robinson, Esq.

In our last number we spoke of the death of Mr. Robinson. We became acquainted with this gentleman about twenty years ago, and although editing papers in the same county since that time, we were not often together. We know Mr. Robinson chiefly from the press which he conducted—the Norfolk Democrat.

Mr. Robinson was a Democrat in every sense of the word. He was a quiet, unobtrusive, straight-forward man. He adhered to his Democratic principles, going wherever they led the way. Great names had no power to swerve him from what he regarded as right. We learn that he has left property, which fact speaks well of his industry and prudence.

Mr. Robinson was brother to the editor of the late Lowell American, and associate editor, at present, of the Commonwealth. We annex the following just tribute to the deceased, from the Dedham Gazette:—

He was a native of Concord, in this State, born of poor and highly respectable parentage, and was early distinguished for the possession of those qualities of intelligence, honesty and sobriety, which ever marked his course through life. He was early apprenticed as a mechanic and continued in the same occupation after his removal to this village, which took place about twenty years since. In the month of August, 1837, he became the proprietor and publisher of the Norfolk Advertiser, and subsequently of the Norfolk Democrat, of which latter paper since February, 1843, he has been editor and proprietor.

For several years, Mr. Robinson had suffered much from chronic rheumatism, until on his return from a journey, he was seized in the early part of September with a recurrence of that complaint, and an aggravated form of erysipelas developing itself, the disease baffled all the efforts of medical skill, and he gradually wasted away until death released him from his sufferings.

For ten long, weary months was he confined to his room, yet though at times suffering intense pain and anguish of body, he preserved in a wonderful degree his characteristic cheerfulness, and exhibited the utmost patience and resignation, in the midst of his trials.

The deceased was a man of strict integrity, conscientious in the discharge of his duty, and true to all the responsibilities imposed upon him. His character was not adorned with those brilliant traits which dazzle and win the applause of the multitude, but it possessed those solid and enduring qualities which engage the respect and esteem of all good and true men.

The latter part of his life was passed in the discharge of the harassing and perplexing duties of one of the most trying professions, much of the time afflicted with severe illness, and without the solace of adequate pecuniary reward. But in spite of all discouragements, he lost none of the native integrity of his character. A firm and decided friend of the prominent reforms of the day, he advocated their claims with zeal and ability, determined at whatever cost of patronage or popularity, to do his share in the great work of love for fallen humanity. Faithful in all the various relations of life, he has passed away, leaving behind the priceless legacy of a good name and an unspotted reputation.

QUINCY MUTUAL FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY.

The office of this flourishing Company is now on Washington street, in the rear of the Stone Temple. We rejoice in the continued prosperity of this corporation, and in its singular good fortune in having made no losses of any magnitude—which is attributable to the good management of its officers and the enterprising spirit of its agents. Too much praise cannot be bestowed upon the efficient and laborious Secretary, Stephen Bates, Esq., for a good measure of the success and popularity of the Company.

THE PEOPLE'S CONVENTION AT WORCESTER. This Convention was well attended. Freesoilers and Know-Nothings were the prime movers. Whigs and Democrats, a few of each were there. The committee chosen were composed about equally of Democrats and Whigs. No nomination was made, but a convention for such a purpose was recommended to be held in August.

HOT WEATHER AND ICE CREAM. The Poison and the Antidote. Dr. Marden will this afternoon and evening entertain his visitors with ice cream. All who have called on the Doctor once will call again; all who have not called, little know what pleasure and delight they missed. Remember, there is nothing like ice cream to keep off the cholera, which is sneaking about Boston, and may take a turn to Quincy.

Who is there among the half million readers of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," that will not now want to see what Mrs. Stowe has to say about what she saw in Europe? See the Publishers' advertisement of Mrs. Stowe's new book in another column.

THE CHOLERA. This epidemic is raging in the Western States, and is extending eastward. In New York it is prevalent, and Boston is suffering from it. Keep clean and cool, beware of green and unripe fruit, and laugh all you can.

CLAN CHOWDER. At Granite Saloon, today, remember French will serve up one of his best dishes. He knows what will suit the palate as well as any other caterer.

Interesting Reminiscences.

In looking over some papers the other day, I found the following account of the laying of the corner stone of the Adams Temple, so called, for the use of the Congregational Society in Quincy; which took place June 11th, 1827. After some appropriate remarks from the pastor, Rev. Peter Whitney, the Hon. Thomas Greenleaf, chairman of the building committee, read the inscription on the plate to be deposited in a lead box, together with the several deeds of land presented to the town by the late President Adams. The following is the inscription:—

"A temple for the public worship of God, and for public instruction in the doctrines and duties of the Christian religion.
"Erected by the Congregational Society in the Town of Quincy, the stone taken from the granite quarries, given to the town by the Hon. John Adams, late President of the United States.
"This stone was laid June 11, 1827, in the fifty-first year of American Independence, the Rev. Peter Whitney Pastor of the Society.
"John Quincy Adams, President of the United States.
"Levi Lincoln, Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.
"John Whitney, Daniel Spear, John Souther, Selectmen of Quincy.

"Building Committee.—Thomas Greenleaf, Chairman, Noah Curtis, John Souther, Lemuel Brackett, Daniel Spear.
"Alexander Parrie, Architect.
"William Wood, Master Builder.
"Memoranda. The population of the town estimated at 2000; that of the United States, at 13,000,000.
"Engraved by Hazen Morse."

This Religious Society was gathered in 1630—is consequently one of the oldest in New England. The old wooden meeting-house, familiar even now, to the recollection of many, stood near the present building. It was built in 1732. The "Stone Temple" was dedicated Nov. 12th, 1828. It contains one hundred and thirty-four pews on the lower floor and twenty-two pews in the galleries. The church is built of granite, with a pediment in front, supported by four doric pillars, the shaft of each being a single block—cost $34,838. Rev. Wm. P. Lunt, the ninth Minister of this Society, was installed as colleague pastor with Rev. Mr. Whitney, June 3d, 1835.

Reply to "A Parent."

MR. EDITOR.—A contributor to your column in the last Patriot asks for a longer vacation than four weeks, and that it shall be increased to six weeks in imitation of the practice of colleges. He asserts that our schools are in session about three weeks less than the students in colleges, in consequence of having no exercises on Saturday. I am in favor of allowing children ample time for vacation, but we ought to remember that the vacations of many children are often stolen from them by their parents and work and hardship are imposed upon them, so that it is a great relief to get into the school-house again.

There is another consideration: the female teachers are paid by the week, and every week added to the vacation is five dollars out of their means of livelihood, while the males are hired by the year, and the loss of a week by vacation causes no diminution of their income. I know there is no justice in such an arrangement. Nor have I been able, after much observation and reflection, to see why male teachers should be paid more salary than the female. It seems to me it is one of these "relics of barbarism" of which "A Parent" speaks. No branches are taught in our Grammar schools beyond the comprehension of intelligent women, and if so, they are equally beyond the comprehension of intelligent men. The idea that the minds of women are inferior to those of men, is another stupid "relic of barbarism." And every one not a brute or fool, knows that a woman's tact, penetration and judgment in controlling the attention of children and imparting instruction, is far superior to those faculties in men. It is enough to make a horse laugh to see these nasal verbiages assume pre-eminence over the other sex, and act as if they were really their superiors in any elements, except brute force. Does any man or woman believe that the boys of this town, on leaving school at the ages of fourteen or sixteen, excel the girls in attainments in those branches which they have both pursued?

In colleges men are employed, because they have prosecuted such studies as would qualify them to teach—females do not prosecute those studies, and therefore are unqualified—and thereupon men speak of inferiority of one sex to the other. One thing is pretty clear, if men are superior in mind and learning, as a general thing, to women, it does not appear from any evidence, in this town, whether in the schools or out of them. If the Committee shall heed the advice of "A Parent" I hope they will pay these teachers, who teach by the week, the same as if they would if there had been no such lengthening of the vacation;—but if they shall not continue their pay, I trust they will deduct from the salaries of the salaried teachers. We hope to live long enough to see this distinction between teachers in our schools, and this partial discrimination in favor of males in rewards for their services—"this relic of barbarism" abolished—all such distinctions and discriminations, whether in schools or in the common walks of life, are founded upon that barbaric principle established in far off times, when women were slaves by virtue of the superior brute force of men—a principle which would logically make the strongest of wild beasts the head of mankind.

As to the use of "cowhides" in our schools I agree with "A Parent." The best jockies of Great Britain in their recent annual report on the best means of "breeding or training horses, declare that the use of whip, spur, and force, are far inferior to kindness and coaxing. We advise our teachers who use cowhides or other weapons, to imitate the humanity of the best jockies of the Derby and other Clubs of Great Britain.

A New and Queer Work.

Muddle, Brick & Co. have published a new novel, which, from a hasty perusal, will be found to be very much above the common level of such works. The incidents are drawn from every day life, and are remarkably true to nature. An extract from the first chapter will give the reader an idea of the book.

"One hot and sultry noon, in the year 1854, when the midnight moon shone with intense heat through the dark and threatening clouds and the gentle breezes of summer blew strong and icy cold from the north, when the bosom of mother Earth was veiled with the rich verdure of December, and the flowers of Spring sent forth from beneath their beds of snow their rich fragrance—there, on such a night as this, at an early hour of the morning, just previously after dinner, when the Know-Nothings were not Wide Awake, a young man, of whose head the sun of scarcely eighty summers had shone, might have been seen wending his way with slow and cautious step, through the mud and slosh which had accumulated during a long and dry summer he stops and leans against the pump, he motions us to approach him; we do so; he raises his hand on high, and with solemn, deep-toned voice, utters the following words:—Friends, countrymen—I am, though you may not know it, one of the greatest travelers of the age. I have been in every seaport in the world, visited every town and hamlet, stood on the tops of the highest mountains, descended to the lowest valleys, dropped down through "Simms' Hole," and explored the earth's interior. I have grazed the earth's axles, sported with the mermaid, rode the whole o'er the mighty deep at a 2-40 tick, traded with every body for every thing, but never in my life, till I visited Quincy, have I found a place where I can trade so advantageously as I can at Savil & Co's, directly opposite the Town Pump, corner of Hancock and Granite streets. Their stock of Furniture is very large, embracing every thing any reasonable man can want, from an article worth twelve and a half cents, to one worth a California pile. Their Dry Goods are the best selected in the market. Their Clothing, custom or ready-made, is A No. 1; in fact, their stock is superior, and what caps the climax, is, they are bound to give customers their money's worth and send them away satisfied,—a thing very unusual in these days of Schuylers. You can take our hat if what we say ain't true."

ORIGINAL AND SELECTED.

The first peaches of the season have made their appearance in the New York market. They were from Savannah, and cost ten dollars per basket.

In England there were 2,000,000 adult males, if not 3,000,000, who never read a newspaper.

The Governor of this State, with the advice of the Council, has appointed Edward Mellen, Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas, in place of Daniel Wells, deceased.

A petition for the repeal of the Fugitive Slave Act, signed by six hundred citizens of Worcester, has been forwarded to Washington. Gov. Washburn's name heads the list.

The Albany Atlas gives the particulars of the death of five persons, members of one family, from eating green peas.

The Schuyler fraud will prove to be the largest swindle ever perpetrated upon the stock exchange of any country. The noted fraud of Fawcett on the Bank of England, from the years 1815 to 1823, for which he suffered death, was about £360,000 sterling, about $1,728,000.

A Whig State Convention has been called to meet in Boston, the 19th of August.

Michael Jennings has been hung at North Haven (Ct.) for killing Esther Bradley.

Between the 22d of June and the 8th of July, seven deaths from yellow fever had occurred at Key West.

There were fifty-four deaths from sun stroke, in New Orleans, the last week in June.

The party which left Boston on Monday, for Kansas, numbered sixteen; thirteen joined it at Worcester, and many more are expected on the route.

The Duke of Wellington's funeral cost the English Government $40,000.

In St. Louis, on the 1st inst., seventeen persons were killed by sun stroke.

Some members of Congress have organized an association to secure the settlement of the new territories by a majority of free-men, and auxiliary societies are springing up all through the north.

The Japanese treaty was confirmed by the Senate on Saturday last. The names of the ports opened are spelt in the last version, Simoda and Hakodale.

Edward Crane, President of the Vermont Central Railroad Company, has been detected in an over-issue of shares.

In New York, on Tuesday last, a rencontre occurred between T. F. Menger and J. A. McMaster, the latter being editor of the Freeman's Journal, in which he had spoken severely of the noted refugee. Menger began the attack with a whip, and the other fired a revolver, when they clinched, and McMaster was thrown. Both were bound over to keep the peace.

The great defaulter in New York, Robert Schuyler, is the same individual who had, a few months since, conscientious scruples about running trains on the New Haven Railroad on Sundays!

ICE CREAM!

All admit during the prevalence of the excessively hot weather the present week, that the true and proper desideratum is, how we shall keep cool. And what is most astonishing, scientific men on this subject are mute. Hence we account for the very unscientific course pursued by the vulgar—such as a dusty, tiresome, tedious drive into the country, or to the sea board; the free use of alcoholic drinks or saline draughts—to say nothing of the inflammatory speeches in Congress, or the unjustifiable use of powder and balls in the East. Things, by the way, a little opposite in their nature.

DR. MARDEN would by no means wish to be considered singular in this matter, and yet he is absolutely compelled by force of circumstances, not only to speak, but act in accordance with convictions of truth and duty. He therefore proposes, by advice of judicious friends, to offer the public, this day, (July 22) an excellent Ice Cream, as an antidote to some of the evils complained of, and should this experiment prove successful, as he confidently believes it will, he may think the public safety will require, if not demand, a repetition hereafter about twice a week.

Deaths.

In Braintree, on the 8th inst., suddenly, of congestion of the brain, Mr. Ezra J., son of Mr. Martin and Mrs. Susan Nash, aged 26 years.

Mourning ones! ye now are weeping
Sodily by the new-made grave.
Where lies one, all calmly sleeping,
Whom no earthly power could save.
Unrelenting Death hath torn him
From his happy home away;
Angels' pinions now have borne him
To the realm of endless day.

Lanes on the Death of EMMA C. FURNALD, who died June 15, 1854, aged 1 year, 5 mos and 8 days.

Farewell! my mother dearest,
Oh do not weep for me;
My troubles all are ended,
I am dwelling with the free.

Farewell! my gentle father,
I know you think of me,
But do not let it grieve you,
For Heaven is a sweet place to me.

Farewell! my sisters sweet,
I cannot play with you;
I cannot hear those prattling voices,
That filled my soul with gloom.

Farewell! my friends and kindred,
A long and last farewell;
But may I meet you all above,
With Jesus Christ to dwell.

M. T. H.

STOVES! STOVES!!

THE subscriber has re-opened his Shop on Hancock Street, nearly opposite the Stone Temple, where will be found a NEW ASSORTMENT of Stoves, Tin, Japan and Britannia Ware as can be found in the market.

Also—Tin, Sheet Iron and Copper Work done to order, in a neat and workmanlike manner. The subscriber would invite his old patrons and the public generally, to give him a call where he will be found personally to attend to them, and all orders done to satisfaction.

The subscriber hopes by strict attention to business and a desire to please to merit a share of public patronage.

For the Patriot.
Memory's Flowers.

BY JENNY—NEW YORK.

I'm dreaming of the past—I'm dreaming
Of pleasures that once were mine;
I've twined a wreath of memory's flowers,
To breathe at memory's shrine.
I can but cherish these fond leaves,
Bright garlands of the past—
For time's the power of bringing back
Youth's joys—when youth is past.

I'm dreaming of the past—I'm dreaming—
Of bright hopes sweetly cherished—
To find, alas! like early flowers,
No sooner bloomed, than perished.
Still, their fragrance will live on O'er hopes forever shattered,
And bring us back our early years
Each leaf that time hath shattered.

I'm dreaming of the past—I'm dreaming—
Oh, never break the charmed spell,
For I would dwell an age with those—
This heart has loved so fondly well.
Come, then, sweet visions of the past,
Weave now thy mystic chain,
To cheer me in my saddest hours,
To live thine o'er again.

A New Story of a Life.

"The seasons come and go, and find him the same."

SPRING.

The hedge is sprouting out again,
The thrush resumes his voice,
The rainbow spans the daisied plain,
The hills and woods rejoice;
But on a roadside mound there sits
Made up of skin and bones,
And sorely plagued with coughing fits—
A man a-breaking stones!

SUMMER.

The hedge is in its greenest suit,
The thrush sings clearer still,
The plain is decked with flower and fruit,
The sun lights up the hill;
But there—upon the rubicund bank,
With short asthmatic groans,
And silvered hair, all long and lank—
That man's a-breaking stones!

AUTUMN.

The hedges gleam with varied leaf,
The thrush darts to and fro,
The plain yields up the golden sheaf,
The hill is all aglow;
But—settled down in granite seat,
With weak and childish frown,
And big, ungainly, unstrutted feet—
That man's a-breaking stones!

WINTER.

Now, stark and spare, the hedges stare;
The thrushy throat grows hoarse;
The plain is bare—all cheerless there,
The hill is bleak and cold;
But there he sits, as before,
With weak and childish frown,
And big, ungainly, unstrutted feet—
That man's a-breaking stones!

MORAL.

Perchance you pity this old soul?
His work will soon be o'er;
Then, recollect, to what a goal
This immortal part may soar!
If man, for all his wicked ways,
In after-life atones,
"Where will it come had spent their days
Like him—a-breaking stones!"

To the Ladies.

Dress up a man that's tall and fair,
Like any pretty maid;
Which of your sex would first declare,
She longed that man to wear?

Just so, when women dress like boys,
The attractive power is gone;
Their sex forgot and all its joys,
When once our clothes are on.

Those who would take the marriage vow
This lesson soon they teach;
That girls in coats and breeches now
Will one day wear the breeches.

From nature and from beauty's line,
Your sex have straggled;
That dress which is not feminine
Must always be absurd.

Anecdotes.

My dear friend, that man has been talking about you so again! He has been telling some of the awfulest lies you ever heard.
Why, he railed about you for an hour!"
"And you heard it all, did you?"
"Yes."

"Well, after this, just remember that it takes two to make a slander—one to tell and one to listen to it."

A Yankee and Irishman riding together, passed by a galloway:
"Pat," said the Yankee, "give that galloway its due, and where would you be?"
"Faith, that's easily known, I'd be riding to town by myself all alone," replied Pat.
Yankee owned up to being beat.

The servant of a Prussian officer one day met a corny, who inquired of him how he got along with his fery master:
"Oh, excellently!" answered the servant;
"we live on very friendly terms; every morning, we best each other's coats; the only difference is, he takes his off, to be beaten, and I keep mine on."

"The long experience and correct taste of
Dr. Stocking, of this city, eminently qualify him to set artificial teeth, that look well, feel well, wear well, and work well; and, what is rather remarkable, he seems to be better pleased with furnishing good work than with exorbitant prices for it,—a trait not common with the profession."—Evening Traveller."We advise all toothless persons to call on Dr. Stocking of this city, and procure some artificial teeth of his manufacture. We offer this advice with the more confidence, because whatever he undertakes to do, he does well.
No one who is acquainted with him can doubt that Nature designed him for a dentist of the right stamp."—Morning Post."No Dentist among us is better qualified to improve the condition of the mouth, by setting, filling, extracting, cleansing, regulating,
&c. of the teeth, than Dr. Stocking of this city. His reputation for doing so, and his skill is too well established to be doubted."—Evening Transcript."Dr. Stocking of this city, possesses the right qualifications for his profession;—requiring,
as it does, a combination of patience, care,
skill and gentleness, with a thorough knowledge of all the intricacies of the business."— Boston Journal."If any of our readers have got the toothache, and wish to know who can extract it with the least pain, we should say, Dr. Stocking, or, if they want their teeth filled, and filled right, we should say, Dr. Stocking, or, if Dr. Stocking. And, above all, if you wish for artificial teeth that every body will be perfect of art, he is the one to furnish them,

Miscellaneous.
How do they Live?

That is a question which every inquiring countryman puts, who looks and thinks upon the crowds of richly dressed people who throng the streets of New York City. It is a wonder, even to the old stagers of this life, how some men, whom they have met every day for twenty years, on the pavement, in the best hotels, at the theatre, ball-room, and places of amusement; at dinners, suppers, parties, excursions, and all sorts of places where money is spent for expensive luxuries, how they live. They are not known to possess any income, have no wealth nor business, never did a day's work of useful labor, and yet they do live, and dress like gentlemen, and would probably offer to fight any one who should insult them. They were a class of useless loafers, an incubus upon society—parasites upon the productive class of mankind. If they are not, how do they live?

But, putting the gentleman loafer out of the question, the class who fill some position of usefulness in city life, who have the appearance to the countryman of passing their time in idleness, is very large; so much so that he grows confused as he looks upon the vast throng, as it goes down Broadway, about eight or nine o'clock in the morning, in one constant stream, six abreast, of well-dressed, easy-to-do-in-the-world looking gentlemen, that he wonders how they live.

Of this great human current which flows down the island all the morning, and up all the evening, there is a striking resemblance in one thing—they all, with the rare exception, now and then, of a real laboring man in the crowd, look as though they never did, nor ever intend to do any work—they are not dressed for it. They all wear black silk hats, calfskin boots or patent leather gaiters, fine cassimere pants, silk vests, broadcloth coats and overcoats, and if there is a sprinkle of rain, each one shelters himself under an umbrella, or helps to fill up the stages which are passing up and down, at the rate of one every five seconds. Every one looks as though he had just come out of the same tailor's shop, and had been perfumed by the same barber.

How do they live?

The countryman stands upon any part of Broadway, below Canal street, and looks upon this current of life "going to business" for three hours in the morning, or sees it returning for an equal length of time in the evening, without discovering from conversation or appearance that one of them ever strained a muscle or soiled a hand, in any productive industry, and he wonders how they live.

Having seen ten thousand broadcloth coats, with silk velvet collars pass him; having noticed that every one looked ruddy, fully-fed, and covered with a sort of city gloss, he is satisfied that this is one of the most healthy, wealthiest, most beautiful, money-making cities in the world, and he even seems to doubt his own senses about its being so intolerably filthy, that he felt so disgusted when he landed, that he declared he would not live in the dirty hole for all its wealth. But that was when he was fighting his way across West street, and up that delectable thoroughfare for steamboat passengers, Robinson street, or while he was wading over Washington or Greenwich street, or running the risk of breaking his neck in the traps of Murray street, or having it broken for him by a hod-full of brick, thrown down from the top of a six story building; or while he expected to have both legs broke by a crush of vehicles in Broadway.

He has forgot all these hair-breadth escapes, and begins to think "New York is a great place to live in, that is a fact," and still he wonders how do they all live, and as just concluding to go down to the merchant to whom he consigned his butter, cheese, bacon, and a lot of apples, and draw the proceeds of sale, which he is sure must have been at the very highest figures; because, notwithstanding he could not see how, surely all these people do live upon the very best, and are wealthy too, and of course don't mind paying the farmers tip top prices.

But just then the sun had got up above the tops of the highest houses he ever saw, all full, too, of merchandise, artist's galleries, business offices, assembly rooms, dining saloons, and restaurants, to restore the energies of those who have performed the labor of walking down town and writing a few lines in a ledger, or selling a few pieces of calico or bags of coffee; and just then he is attracted by a new feature in the current of life. The broadcloth flood has gone by, and is succeeded by billowy waves of the richest silks, laces, cashmeres, velvets, plushes, ribbons, feathers, pearls, diamonds, gold and gilt (guilt) in dazzling splendor.

"There," says he, "goes a woman with more money upon her back than would serve to clothe my wife and ten children for ten years, and she is fairly sweeping the street with a silk dress that cost three dollars a yard, and narrow at that. I wonder how she lives? It is evident, however, that everybody is rolling in wealth in New York, and all these tales about suffering poverty are all gammon. Oh, I shall get a famous price for my bacon!"

So he went down to Mr. Five per cent's store, and seeing a stout looking man, dressed in overalls and sleeves suitable to his work, he took him for the principal, and the four or five elegantly dressed young gents in the store for rather foppish country merchants, never once supposing they were clerks, as they only touched articles with the tips of their fingers.

"Sir," said he, to the supposed head of the house, "I have come down to look after that lot of butter, cheese, and bacon, I sent you last fall to sell for me."

"Arrah, now, is it me you're after with your cheese and bacon? An' faith, ye'll be looking a long time before ye get anything of me in that line."

Mr. Farmer stood amazed, but one of the elegantly dressed young gentlemen hearing something about bacon, cheese, and butter, thought the man wanted to buy, and stepped up with a very patronizing air, to inform him that "they did not usually deal in those articles. The father of the present proprietor did formerly something in that line, and a few stupid fellows in the country occasionally trouble them with some of their greasy stuff on consignment, but they had nothing of the kind now, and he hoped never should have again, it was such dirty stuff to handle. For his part he did not see how people lived in the country, where they made such stuff." It is a mystery, certainly, to city folks. The farmer explained his business, and was told that he would "have to see the old man."

The old man proved to be a gentleman about forty years of age, seated into a large morocco-cushioned chair, at a mahogany desk, in a room covered with fine Brussels carpet, looking over the morning papers.

The Farmer told his name and business, and was answered with a "Hem, let me see, bacon, butter, and cheese, to be sold on commission. Mr. Goosequill, when was Mr. Farmer's stuff received? Ah, first of November—March now four months—sold on four months credit—very low—exceedingly handsome for money—money—don't think we have realized yet—will write you as soon as we get the money. What is the amount, Mr. Goosequill? Ah, $1,500—commission, insurance, guarantee and other charges, $200—$1,300 due."

"That is much less than I expected; I should have done better if I had sold it at home."

"Oh, we had to sell very low to realize the money—pinching times—don't know what we are coming to in New York—just as much as we can do to make both ends meet, rents and provisions are so high."

"But you have just sold my things very low."

"Yes, hem, but that was at wholesale—these retailers made all the money. "Two and sixpence a pound for butter."

"Two and sixpence, why, there is mine only credited at fourteen cents."

"Yes, at wholesale, and second rate, too, I suppose. That is a good price for common butter."

"Common butter—second rate—why, my butter was tip-top, sweet as a rose, and—"

"So it was; the best we ever had in the house—can't you send us some more of it? Mr. Five-per-cent sent us up one firkin, and we had a party at our house that night; and our friends were so well pleased, that each one insisted on having a winter's supply, and so we did not get half enough. I do wish you would send us some more."

Mr. Farmer was not so much taken aback as the merchant, at this speech of Mrs. Five-per-cent, who had just rolled a bundle of silks into the office, in company with her young lady daughter, now fourteen years of age, who wanted a couple of hundred dollars, to get some spring dresses.

"It was awkward, but the gentleman managed to turn it off with, "confounded mistake—don't know what you're talking about—not the man—another lot."

"Another lot! Why, you told me you had but one this winter. But never mind, give us the money—we are in a hurry—Miss Spend-all is waiting for us in our carriage, at the door."

It is very awkward, but the young lady said, "come, father, don't be so niggardly," and he had to tell the cashier to charge $200 more to family expenses.

He managed to get rid of the owner of the "second rate, first quality butter," with a couple of hundred more, with the distinct assurance that he would forward the balance just as soon as Baron & Co. paid up, or things took a turn. Mr. Farmer watched the post-office for a fortnight, and then wrote a letter, hoping things had taken a turn, as he saw the steamers had brought in a couple of millions of gold since he was in New York.

He got a letter by return of mail, from the "assignees of James Five-per-cent, Esq., late Commission Merchant," and found that things had "taken a turn," for he had failed, and assigned all his property in favor of endorsers, and "they were extremely sorry to inform him that to pay the preferred creditors would strip his family of all their comforts, and leave nothing for outside creditors. They were pained very much for the worthy family of Five-per-cent, and did not see how they would live."

The farmer himself has frequently visited New York since that time, has seen Mr. Five-per-cent and his wife still living, and a great many more of the same class, and has never once mentally ejaculated "how do they live?" He knows.—N. Y. Tribune.

To Collect Old Debts.

A Mobile correspondent of the New Orleans Delta relates the following:
An old monetary transaction has just come to my knowledge, which may amuse you.

Massinger, the old poet, taught us a new way to pay old debts, but we have an Alabamian, who lately put in practice a new way to collect old debts, which, if not as dramatic was quite as effective, though, perhaps, the mode could not find sanction in any code save the law of necessity.

Ned is a clever fellow, a shrewd trader—mirthful, facetious, and industrious withal, for he has never lived by his wits, though possessed of considerable. All of these John Hays was not. He was plausible, tricky, and evidently dishonest. Ned had an acceptance of his—long past due—when some neighbor told him John had gathered together every cent he could raise, fairly or unfairly—would pay no one—and was off to-norway for California. This was a bad show for Ned's money lent. Force would be worse than useless, and a ruse was the forlorn hope.

"John, I hear you are off for the diggings."

"Yes, I go to-norway."

"Well, I'd like you to return me that money."

"I am sorry I can't, for I have not a cent."

Now Ned knew his pocket-book was downright plenary, over crowded.

"Well, if you can't, it's bad, but no reason for our parting in ugliness. So, let's take a drink."

Ned is capital company—can drink his share—and joke a good deal more. So in pursuance of his humor, and more of his plan he laughed and quaffed, and smoked and joked, and seemed not to have had a debt in the world.

John relished his fun, but his liquor more; and as his head and honesty were equally weak and unreliable, he soon began to close one eye, as though by lessening the number of Ned's began to find before him he could better observe the one in particular. Whether he did so or not, Ned observed him—and carefully too. "For God that's a more exquisite song than 'other,'" said Cassio, when the "middle" was in full force, and "let's have another champagne!" cried John, in a similar tone, and under the same condition.

This gave him a qui-tus, and John was escorted to their mutual room by the facetious but wary Ned.

Fast sleeping and snoring lay John, dreaming of California, or champagne, or perhaps a mixture of the two, when Ned took out a suspicious and ancient looking attenuated piece of paper, which seemed remarkably like a long sleeping, much handled "promised to pay." Carefully counting interest from date to day, writing down the same upon the note—then endorsing the document with "received the contents 3d Oct. '52, E. H., he turned to gaze upon his pot companion.

"D—good!" muttered the sleeper—"let's have another."

Ned then carefully counted out from the sleeper's ill-gotten pocket-book the exact sum of the debt and interest, and in its stead deposited the aforesaid cancelled acceptance, and retired to rest.

Early in the morning John rose up, not like a giant refreshed with wine, but like a medium sized rascal, who had taken too much of it over night.

On opening his depository for stolen goods, the pocket-book, John suddenly exclaimed—"I have been robbed of three hundred dollars."

"Robbed," asked Ned. "Oh no! that can't be, for I locked the door myself."

"But if so, I have been robbed of three hundred and odd dollars."

"Robbed, of three hundred and odd? Of three hundred? Why, that's just the sum you owed me. And now I think of it: did you not pay me that note?"

"No, I told you I could not."

"Yes," said Ned, "I remember that, but some how it strikes me—three hundred! we were both very drunk I know—but let me see, just as we were going to bed. Three hundred? Yes, I think that you finally paid me that note."

"No I tell you!" shouted John, "I have been robbed!"

"Well now," said Ned, as innocently as if he had lived among the Indians, I begin to feel strongly that you did. Just search your pocket-book for that note?"

John ran over his papers like one who looks for what he does not wish to find, when suddenly the cancelled note meets his eye.

Ned, too, was looking over his port monnaie with the expression of an innocent, who unexpectedly finds that he has more money at the end of the spree than he began with. John gazed at his bony friend, chagrin fallen, vainly wondering how he was accidentally seduced into an honest act.

The next day John left for California.

Scatter Blessings.

I don't know of anything in the world that makes a body feel so good as to scatter blessings. Good temper, good luck, a good wife, rosy children, are well-springs of pleasure; and they'll make almost any man want to live long in the land; but scatter kindness and mercies with a generous hand. Oh! it's the most splendid thing ever heard of to make a man comfortable—to give him songs in the night, and an ocean of delight by day.

If there's anybody living who thinks his match for misery can't be found, I wish he'd come right here to me, and I'll put him on the right track for comforts. This whining, this being unhappy, how it makes a man feel, and what a shame it is to him. A very unhappy man told me he was miserable! he did not care for anybody. I told him he didn't care for anybody, and that made him miserable. He didn't like it much that I wouldn't let the horse stop behind the cart just as he put him, but wasn't I right? I don't know a great deal, and I never expect to; but my restless wandering eye has at last discovered the lurking place of pleasure. I know the secret of happiness; yet I do. Scatter blessings—run with your bucket, and help fill the ocean of happiness.

Don't be frightened because you are not as big as everybody else—because you are not quite as showy as Goliath of Gath. Run straight along with your bucket, and pour it into the ocean of human happiness. Don't tremble on the road for fear you'll meet some mighty man who'll ask you about "those few sheep you lost in the wilderness." Go ahead with your bucket—get through your business, and you'll go home with a light heart, and your face won't look like "Old Hundred" as it did before. You want have to say, that you live in a bright little world of delight, but that your face is so elongated by your discomforts, that no yard stick can measure it.

Oh! scatter blessings—it's holy—it's sublime to do it. Scatter blessings, and comforting angels will be your guard—you will not be in trouble like other men, and a joy "that passeth understanding will fill your hearts."

Church Reflections.

So Mr. Brown is to preach to-day—I hope he would exchange. I suppose he is a good man, but his sermons are dreadfully dull; and so long! If I were a minister, I wouldn't write any sermon over fifteen minutes, and wouldn't average over ten.

I wonder who that stranger is in Squire Bigelow's pew? How interesting he looks, with his long curls. I should like to get acquainted with him.

Good graces! If that Smith girl hasn't got another new bonnet. It isn't becoming in the least; however, it will do well enough for her.

Kate Melvin has got a new shawl! How beautiful it is. I've no doubt she got it at Sivil's; I saw one there the other day just like it. I'll go to-morrow, and see if I can't get one similar.

Well, I never! If there isn't a gentleman in Miss Periwinkle's pew. Wonder if he's courting the old maid. Don't believe he'd make quite such a fool of himself; for she's thirty-five or more, and sour enough to turn the sweetest milk. I've no doubt she'd like to get him if she could; or anybody else, for that matter.

Heigh-ho! what a long sermon!

Oh! there's Mrs. Eunice, the bride. How sweetly she is dressed. I'll call on her to-morrow. I hear she's got a brother in the army. I'll manage to get introduced, if, as I hear, he's coming to spend a furlough.

Wonder whether anybody notices my new silk. I hope so; for what's the use of having new things, unless they are seen.

The sermon through; what a relief!

"How do you do, Mrs. Jones? Fine sermon."

"Yes, very; I listened to it with much pleasure."

The Word Esquire.

The word is from the French escuyer, (shield-bearer,) and originally signified nothing more. It was applied to the armor-bearers of knights and barons, who were second in rank to them.

The esquire was a gentleman, and had the right of quartering arms on his shield, as also of wearing a sword, which denoted gentility, though he was not girted with the knightly belt.

This was the esquire of chivalry, of whom we have an amusing burlesque in the person of Sancho Panza, the valorous attendant of that famous knight errant, Don Quixote.

Another class, feudal esquires, consisted of those who had a right to claim knighthood, but had not been dubbed. The younger sons of dukes and marquises, the younger sons of viscounts, earls and barons, and their eldest sons, with the eldest sons of baronets, and of knights of all orders, are regarded in England as esquires by birth, though their precedence, which differs widely, is regulated by the ranks of their respective ancestors.

Officers of the Queen's court and household, her army and navy, down to captains inclusive, doctors of law, barristers and physicians are reputed esquires. A justice of the peace is only an esquire during the term of his office; but a sheriff of the county, it is used as almost indiscriminately, as an expression of respect.—Sunday Times.

The Useful and the Beautiful.

The tomb of Moses is unknown, but the traveler slakes his thirst at the well of Jacob. The gorgeous palace of the wisest of monarchs, with the cedar, and gold, and ivory, and even the temple of Jerusalem, hallowed by the visible glory of the Deity himself, are gone; but Solomon's reservoirs are as perfect as ever. Of the ancient architecture of the Holy City, not one stone is left upon another; but the pool of Bethesda commands the pilgrim's reverence to the present day. The columns of Persepolis are mouldering into dust; but its cisterns and aqueducts remain to challenge our admiration. The golden house of Nero is a mass of ruin; but the Aqua Claudia still pours into Rome its limpid stream. The temple of the sun at Tadmor in the wilderness, has fallen; but its fountains sparkle as freshly in its ruins, as when thousands of worshippers thronged its colonades. It may be that London will share the fate of Babylon, and nothing be left to mark its site, save mounds of crumbling brickwork; but the Thames will continue to flow as it does now. And if any work of art should still rise over the deep ocean of time, we may well believe that it will be neither place or temple, but some vast reservoir; and if any name should still flash through the mist of antiquity, it will probably be that of man, who in his day sought the happiness of his fellow-men, rather than their glory, and linked his memory to some great work of national utility and benevolence. This is the true glory which outlives all others, and shines with undying luster from generation to generation—imparting to works something of its own immortality, and in some degree rescuing them from that ruin which overtakes the ordinary monuments of historical tradition of mere magnificence.

Corking the Jug.

A correspondent to the Philadelphia Son, writing from Cohasset, (Mass.) relates a good anecdote of a physician residing in that place, which he says is a fact and the best temperance lecture he ever heard.

Some thirty years ago this doctor was addicted to hard drinking, and neglected his professional duties to such an extent, that the people were obliged to send to Boston for a new physician, a younger man, whom they colonized amongst them. Things went on very well for a time, the old doctor losing patients, and the new doctor finding them. At last this brace of peacocks met in a storm, "the old doctor purchasing a jug of rum," and the "young doctor buying a barrel of flour." Some invidious remark of a bystander called forth a sneer from the younger and more flourishing of the two doctors. This was noticed and interpreted by the old one, who with a calm and deliberate air, put the cork into the jug of rum, and turning to the sneering opponent, he said: "I have put the cork into that jug, and I will never take it out again until I have starved you out of the town of Cohasset." He kept his word, and in about a year from that time he had regained all his old patients and friends and obliged the young doctor to evacuate, for fear of starving.

Writers for the Press.

Of all the situations to learn character, capacity and literary tact, a printing office probably possesses advantages equal to any other place, and a good practical printer may be set down as a good judge of the composition of authors. Being constantly engaged in reading manuscripts, a printer would much sooner discover grammatical errors, repetitions or a disconnection of sentences, than a person who may read much, with a desire only for information. The printer makes it his business to discover errors (and make them too, not unfrequently) however much such things may mortify authors. Many men have genius, learning, and good sense, but not the faculty of expressing in any tangible manner what they know. Some make themselves ridiculous in the attempt, and their productions, if placed over their own signatures, in the manner they were first written, without any trimming or punctuating by the type, would utterly effect their standing as men of literary talent. Some writers commence by attempting an elucidation of subjects as far above their power of description as is the most towering eloquence above the first prattle of a child, and of course fall for a lack of descriptive powers. Others may be troubled by an extra amount of language, and in their great flourish of words, lose the subject they would explain. This, according to our idea, is worse than a lack of language, as it generally leads to bombast, and shows up most ridiculously. The object in saying anything about writers for the press, is that printers are not unfrequently the victims of some imprudent, self-conceited scribbler, who of course think their productions able, sound and polished, and appear to think strange if everybody is not of the same opinion. We have lately been troubled with effusion from men having such wrongful opinions of themselves, as we have made note of above. We must be permitted to allege that they are decided bores. We would have none stop writing, for by practice comes improvement, but don't trouble the printer with long, prolix, bungling, ungrammatically or obscurely written articles. Be brief—let your language be plain and simple—be sure that you have something to write about, and the editor, as well as printer, will always greet your productions with a hearty good cheer.

Sweet Thoughts.

How sweet the thought that Jesus sympathizes with all our joys and sorrows! The great demand of human nature is the demand for sympathy. Men must have it, or they cannot be happy, however extensive their possessions, or high their rank. But how little sympathy is to be found among men! How precious the thought that our Savior sympathizes with every joy and every sorrow! Christians, do you sometimes feel that you are alone, and there are none who care for you? You are mistaken. You forget that Jesus is ever by your side, that he approves every innocent smile, and notices every falling tear, and feels for you a love of sympathy that no finite mind can measure.

How sweet the thought that God reigns! The nations are perplexed and troubled, the foundations of the earth are out of course, the wisdom of the wise seems to be of no avail, and the strong man is as a child; still we can look upon the troubled scene without fear, for God reigns. Amid all the confusion and uproar, his counsel shall stand; and he shall do all his pleasure. Not only is he the Governor of the nations, but he governs and directs all matters pertaining to our individual interest; not a hair of our heads falls to the ground without his notice, and the resources of Omnipotence are pledged to cause all things to work together for our good.

How sweet the thought that death is going home! He who has been an exile in a strange land, who has dwelt among people of a strange tongue, rejoices at the sight of a res-sel which is to bear him to his native shores, where he shall enter again the paternal mansion, and receive the welcome of loved ones there. Death, rightly viewed, is the messenger who is to conduct us to our home in heaven, where our brethren who have gone before us are waiting to welcome us—where Jesus, who has gone to prepare a mansion for us, is waiting to receive us. How sweet the thought, in a few years more, perhaps in a few days, I shall be safe in heaven!

Surely, with thoughts like these, for constant themes of meditation, the Christian may well obey the command of the apostle, "Rejoice evermore, and again I say rejoice."—Presbyterian.

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

"BORN TO NO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE."

UNITARIAN SUNDAY SCHOOL PIC NIC. All interested in the proposed excursion will find in another column the particulars as to time, place, &c.

There will be the usual means of enjoyment on such occasions. Music, dancing and speaking.

ICE CREAM. Dr. Marden will again to-day provide this favorite luxury of the season. His efforts to please the public have been appreciated. We recommend all who love ice cream to give him a call. They will find it nice and good.

BRAINTREE. Eighty-one people of BRAINTREE, (Mass.) having written to the New York Tribune to expose Perham, by whom they had been swindled into the purchase of tickets in his gift enterprise, the Tribune declines the job, and suggests that the authorities of BRAINTREE should take measures for the safety of the place, for a town with eighty-one such fools in it, must be in imminent danger of a catastrophe of some sort.

CHOWDER. This favorite dish will be again served at the Granite Saloon, to-day, to the admirers of this truly American preparation, in true French style.

ANTHRACITE COAL TRADE. The Boston Herald states that enormous quantities are received every week, and vessels by the hundred are daily freighted for our commercial ports. There is no reason under heaven why coal should not be as cheap this season as it has ever been. The present extortionate prices must come down.

ACTS AND RESOLVES. We have received from the Secretary of State a copy of the Acts and Resolves passed by the General Court of Massachusetts in the year of 1854, together with the Messages. They are contained in an octavo volume of 492 pages.

INTERESTING BOOK. To the attention of our popular Representative in Congress, Hon. J. Wiley Edmunds, are we indebted for a copy of Herndon's Valley of the Amazon, with the Maps, which is a very interesting and valuable report.

PITTSBURGH BOARD OF TRADE AND THE MERCHANTS' MAGAZINE. We published in the Patriot of Saturday last, an article on the Growth of St. Louis, embodying the resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce of that city, relating to Hunt's Magazine. The Chicago Tribune, one of the ablest and best inland commercial journals in the country, introduces these resolutions, with some highly eulogistic remarks. The Tribune says—"As a standard work, Hunt's Merchants' Magazine has no equal in the world, and stands higher in comparison with all other works of a similar character than Webster's Dictionary does above all other works of that character."

The Pittsburgh Board of Trade and Chamber of Commerce, following the lead of similar commercial associations in New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Cincinnati, St. Louis, and other cities, at home, and the Paris Chamber of Commerce abroad, has made "Hunt's Merchants' Magazine" the subject of special consideration, and in the subjoined resolutions expressed its high sense of the value of that work.

PITTSBURGH, JUNE 5, 1854.

At a regular meeting of the Pittsburgh Board of Trade and Chamber of Commerce, held at their room on the 1st of June, 1854, it was unanimously

Resolved, That this Association takes great pleasure in recommending to the favorable attention of the business community, "Hunt's Merchants' Magazine and Commercial Review," as a work eminently deserving of patronage and support. To all who take an interest in the affairs of trade, commerce, currency, agriculture, manufactures, &c., either foreign or domestic; or who are desirous of information on kindred subjects, presented in an attractive form, from an able and reliable source, "Hunt's Magazine" is a most invaluable book of reference, having sustained for the last fifteen years, both at home and abroad, a high reputation for commercial intelligence and mercantile literature.

Resolved, That a copy of these proceedings be forwarded to Mr. Hunt, signed by the Secretary and stamped with the seal of the Association.

W. S. HAYES, Sec'y.

For the Patriot.

The Institution of Slavery.

That it is a part of the Providence of God that one portion of the human race should live in subjection to the other, is evident from many and very grave facts. From the earliest period of the human race, of which we have authentic record, slavery has existed in one form or another. How is such a fact reconcilable with any benevolent theory, except that it was the design of the Almighty? The old Testament from beginning to end, recognizes the existence of slavery, and nowhere therein condemns it.

How often are the institutions of Greece and Rome held up to our admiration. The youth of America are ever reading and studying the historic records of Grecian and Roman civilization. Many monuments of their high civilization and refinement are preserved to excite our wonder and defy and mock at the highest efforts of art and science and genius of modern times. In these periods the institution of slavery was the foundation of society.

I pass over the Middle Ages, truly called the Dark Ages, when from Iceland to the Euphrates the darkness of Ignorance covered Europe as the waters the great deep. Little is known of the structure of society in that long period.

In modern times slavery exists in the most enlightened portions of the world; in fact, in all enlightened and unenlightened parts of the globe. What is the condition of the laboring classes of Europe—what better than that of the slaves of ancient times. Surely, no one who has read and studied the organization of society in Europe, would place the poorer and laboring portion of mankind above the servants or slaves of ancient times. And there is no sign that goes to show that a state of dependence and slavery will not be always the lot of the poor and degraded and laboring mass. It is in the nature of things. The truth is, men are not equal in any thing. They are not capable of self-government. Mankind are depraved; and the great majority must be kept in subordination by force. The history of the world for six thousand years prove these things; and how sickly, how ignorant of the history of our race, how condemnatory of the Providence of God, that has permitted the abjection of one and the larger part of his children to be servants and slaves to the other, now to denounce such Providence of God and declare it to be all wrong.

It is from such views as these, that I have concluded that this great movement in America, called by some Native-Americanism—by others, in their slang phrase, Know-Nothingism, is in the right direction. The Declaration of Independence, put forth in 1776, served its purpose. It was well to hold out the idea that all men were born free and equal and ought to be independent. For it was by such means that the poorer and lower classes were engaged in the war which eventually severed our connection with the Crown of England. None knew better than they who issued that Declaration, that it was all a fiction. Half of them, at that very moment, had body-slaves. They knew those slaves were unfree to be freemen. All the States at that time, with but one or two exceptions, authorized the holding of men in bondage. The declaration that all men are by nature free and equal, can be reasonably interpreted only on the supposition that it refers to white men of intelligence and spirit, whose noble natures revolted at the thought of labor and toil. To suppose otherwise, is in fact to charge those truly great men with the grossest inconsistency. They knew that all men were not equal—they knew their own slaves were not their own equals; they knew it was impossible that their own slaves were capable of voting and acting as wisely in the management of the political affairs of the country as themselves.

The framers of the Declaration of Independence and the framers of the Constitutions of the several States went on the principle, although not to the full extent, that all men of intelligence and noble natures had an equal right to contend for the governments of States and for the honors of political distinction. The others were only fit to obey and contribute by their toil to the material wealth and glory of the State. I believe, in the Ancient Mythology, access to the Elysian fields was denied to slaves and the poor and ignorant. So deeply is this instinct or principle embedded in the human heart; undoubtedly they carried the principle too far.

Does any intelligent man believe that these ignorant and superstitious emigrants that crowd our ships, and infest our cities like locusts, are capable of self-government? They were slaves at home. What miraculous power is there in an ocean passage to work so great a change as to fit them for freemen? Every man knows in his own heart they are not. They should be reduced to slavery again. They should be seized as they step upon our wharves, and then, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the legislatures of the States, should be sold to the highest bidder. As slaves in this country, they would be far better off than ever before. I hail, therefore, in this new party, the savior of our liberty, and the recovery of lost rights and privileges on the part of that portion of our people who are alone fit by their social positions, their intelligence and high spirit to govern the hoofed rabble. We must come to that at last.

Let the new party go forward. Deprive all of alien birth, now in the country, of the right to vote, and go on to reduce them step by step to serfdom and slavery, shut up the avenues to political privileges and honor, to those of foreign blood. Let those who hereafter shall land on our shores be put in bondage, according as their intelligence and natures shall demand, from periods varying from ten years to eternal subjugation,—they and all that shall be born of them. We shall then bring back the times of the Patriarchs, of Greece and Rome, and even of modern, powerful, wealthy, happy and glorious Europe. Be assured the mission of our Republic is ended. It has proved a failure. Men are incapable of self-government. Nowhere in America are there peace, law and order, except where there is slavery. Mob law, riots, insurrections, pillage, murders, are rife in the free states. Every thing is at stake. Slaveholders at the South are willing to assist us in subduing the troublesome elements among us. Let us begin on the foreign element. The day will come when even some of our own Irish and German, or poor northern white folks, as slaves. The day will come when Yankees shall crack their whips and lord it over their bondmen, and rank as high in society and in the State as the nobility of Russia or Austria. The South are with us in this great enterprise. Butler and Badger and Clayton and Pettit are for us. Come, let all join in the great work; "be ye never so vile. This cause shall better your condition."

A NATIVE AMERICAN.

Cambridge College.

The triennial catalogue of Harvard University for 1854, was distributed on Commencement day last. To the alumni of this oldest college of New England and to all who have received honorary or professional degrees there, the triennial is always a welcome visitor. Alas! the associations it calls up of the living and the dead; but we will not moralize, although indeed the theme is a fruitful one. Let us proceed at once to give this catalogue a brief, and we fear a very imperfect, notice. Whole number who have received degrees, (a period of two hundred and twelve years past) is 8369. E vivis ceserunt stelligeri 4803, leaving now living 3566. The oldest graduate living is the Hon. John Wells, who was of the class of 1782. Asa Andrews, a graduate of 1783, is the only survivor of his class. None are living of 1784, and but one, Rev. Thaddeus Fiske, D. D., of 1785. The survivors of the class of 1786 are Joseph Loring, Rev. Henry Lincoln and Jacob Norton. Hon. William Cranch, and Walter Hunnewell, M. D., are all that remain among the fifty-odd graduates of 1787.—Hon. John Quincy Adams class. William Sawyer is all that is left of the graduates of 1788; and we believe none are spared of 1789. The venerable Josiah Quincy has outlived all his classmates of 1790. Of the class of 1791, Charles Porter Phelps, Hon. Thomas Rice and John Walton, M. D., are living. The Rev. Peter Whitney, who died in 1843, was of this class. The surviving graduates of 1792 are Henderson Trench of Boston, Hon. John Locke, Hector Orr, M.D., of East Bridgewater, and Jacob Wyeth. Of 1793, Hon. Charles Jackson, Samuel Thatcher and Thomas Wigglesworth, are still among the living. The Rev. Isaac Bramer is the only graduate alive of 1794. Rev. Caleb Bradley, Samuel A. Dow, Henry Gassett, Hon. Benjamin Gorham, Ebenezer Lawrence, Francis J. Oliver, Samuel J. Prescott and Rev. Silas Warren, are the survivors of the class of 1795. Henry Abbott, Thomas Barron, Samuel Dana, James Jackson, M. D., Rev. James Kendall, D. D., William Wells, Rev. Leonard Woods, D. D., and Rev. Luther Wright, are the living graduates of 1796. Let us approach to the close of the past century and then pause. The living graduates of 1797 are Horatio Binney, Nathaniel P. Denny, Samuel Farrar, Dr. Henry Gardner of Dorchester, Daniel Howard, Joseph Hurst, Leonard Jarvis, Wm. Jenks, D. D., Thomas Jewett, Hon. James Richardson of Dedham, Joseph Tilton, Robert Turnbull, John C. Warren, M. D., and Daniel A. White. Of 1798, Andrew Crosswell, Humphrey Devereaux, Hon. Samuel P. P. Fay, Isaac Fisk, Ralph H. French, Jonathan French, D. D., Henry Gardner, M. D., Matthias Spaulding, M. D., Richard Sullivan, Sidney Willard, and William Williams, are living. From the forty-four graduating from the class of 1799, twelve remain, viz: Horatio G. Barnap, Ebenezer Clapp, Parker Cleveland, Joseph Dane, Freeman Foster, Willard Hall, Joshua Lane, Humphrey Moore, Obediah Parker, Samuel D. Parker, Wm. H. Hyslop and Samuel Swan. Of all who graduated at Cambridge prior to 1800, we believe but 73 are alive, and but ten survive who received their academic honors previous to 1790. A solemn demonstration of the brevity of man's days. The class of 1853 was the largest that ever graduated, being eighty-eight in number. In the years 1644, '48, '72, '82 and '88, no degrees were conferred—and there was but a single graduate in each of the years 1652 and '54. Relentless mortality has been unusually busy in the ranks of old Harvard's sons since the triennial catalogue of 1848 was issued, some hundred, whose names were then registered with the living have passed, we believe, to purer classic grounds than this earth affords; the commencement of an eternal round of spiritual knowledge and holiness.

Rev. John Hancock, father of Gov. Hancock, was ordained over the First Congregational Society in BRAINTREE, now Quincy, Nov. 2, 1726, and continued its pastor about eighteen years. In 1739 he preached his famous century sermon, on the completion of the first century since the gathering of the church. In that sermon he observes, that since the foundation of Harvard College, scarce any town in the province hath reaped greater advantage from it than this; there have been graduated in it, if I mistake not, forty-nine of the children of this people, and forty-two out of this parish ("now Quincy"); many of them have done worthily and been famous, both in church and state—and this, over one hundred and fifteen years since. As near as it now can be estimated, Quincy has furnished about one hundred young men, who have graduated at Cambridge.

Six Weeks' Vacation.

The article, in your last, headed Reply to "A Parent," needs no answer. The parent, who wrote the article, is a friend to all teachers, whether male or female, and also to children; and still goes for six weeks' vacation. Students in college have Wednesday and Saturday afternoons, besides vacations. We do not intend to discuss the subject of woman's rights—yet, in reply to that part of the article, we say that things are considered worth what they will bring in the market. If one of our female teachers should resign, and a notice be put in the paper, that a female teacher was wanted for an annual school in Quincy, at five dollars per week, there would be fifty applicants, at least, for the situation; and many of them would be good experienced teachers. In the former article, we made no allusion to one sex more than the other; and the gain or loss of five dollars to some individuals is a poor argument, to put against the health of our children.

ICE CREAM! All admit during the prevalence of the excessively hot weather the present week, that the true and proper desideratum is, how we shall keep cool. And what is most astonishing, scientific men on this subject are mute. Hence we account for the very unscientific course pursued by the vulgar—such as a dusty, tiresome, tedious drive into the country, or to the sea board; the free use of alcoholic drinks or saline draughts—to say nothing of the inflammatory speeches in Congress, or the unjustifiable use of powder and balls in the East. Things, by the way, a little opposite in their nature.

Dr. MARDEN would by no means wish to be considered singular in this matter, and yet he is absolutely compelled by force of circumstances, not only to keep, but act in accordance with convictions of truth and duty. He therefore proposes, by advice of judicious friends, to offer the public, this day, (July 29) an excellent Ice Cream, as an antidote to some of the evils complained of, and should this experiment prove successful, as he confidently believes it will, he may think the public safety will require, if not demand, a repetition hereafter about twice a week. Quincy, July 29. 1w

PIC-NIC EXCURSION TO HINGHAM. On Thursday next, the members of the Sunday School connected with Rev. Dr. Lunt's Church, together with their parents and friends, propose to spend the afternoon in the Grove adjoining the Old Colony House in Hingham.

Cars will leave Quincy for Hingham at precisely 12 1/2 o'clock, P. M., and returning will leave Hingham at 7 o'clock; tickets, to go by the cars, will be for sale at the Quincy Bookstore, and at the stores of I. W. Munroe & Co., Daniel Baxter & Co., and G. H. Locke. The cars will stop at South Quincy Depot, going and returning.

Tickets half price, for both ways. A Committee will be in attendance at the Lyceum Room, from 7 1/2 to 10 o'clock, A. M., of Thursday, to receive contributions for the table. It is requested that all such contributions shall be delivered at the Lyceum Room before 10 o'clock.

Addresses will be made at the Grove. A Band of Music will be in attendance. It is especially requested that all who intend to join the party in the Grove, shall go by the cars. GEO. WHITE, Superintendent of Sunday School. Quincy, July 29.

A meeting of the Adams Literary Association will take place at their Hall, on MONDAY EVENING next, at 7 1/2 o'clock. JONATHAN JAMESON, President. JAMES WHITE, Secretary.

Deaths.

In Milton, on the 24th inst., Mr. Alpheus T. French, only brother of Mr. Daniel French of this town, aged 73 years.

In Dorchester, (Neponset Village), on the 21st inst., Mr. Chandler Cross, aged 39 years. In Boston, on the 20th inst., Mrs. Abigail, wife of Mr. Nicholas Land, aged 51 years.

In her life she was a bright exemplar of fortitude and maternal care, and through a long and painful consumption she bore up without a murmur, and when dying expressed a firm belief that her peace was made with God, and that she was soon to be in a far brighter and happier world. She has left a large circle of acquaintances, with her afflicted husband and children, long to mourn her loss.

Poetry.

For the Patriot.
Independent Day.

BY F. M. ADLINGTON—WETMOUTH.

'Tis Independent Day, mamma,
Why don't they ring the bell?
Why don't they shout and cry huzzas,
Dear mother, can you tell?
I ask'd my pa to tell me why
The bells had not been rung
With angry looks he passed me by,
And bade me hold my tongue,
And madder'd 'twixt his grating teeth—
I blush to tell the chap
The head for which we 'twind the wreath,
Deserves a motley's cap.

Last year, they hang'd the colors ont,
And rang the bells like him,
And all the people march'd about,
And had a fine and drum;
And now they all look cross or sick—
I wish somebody'd tell—
Why is it, mother, tell me quick,
Why don't they ring the bell?
Alas, my son, we have no cause
For much rejoicing now;
Our Traitors have made wicked laws,
To which we all must bow.
Old Massachusetts feels the stroke,
Her hills and valleys groan;
She cannot bear a Tyrant's yoke,
And how submissive down.
A voice is heard along her strand
And echo'd o'er the waves—
Curs'd be the fiend who doom'd this land
A trap for hunted slaves.
Yet Fillmore wolves and Douglass hounds
Have made it slavery's hunting grounds.
Why whisper my boy, why don't he play?
Oh mother, need I tell?
They've murdered Independent Day!
We ought to tell the bell.
July 4th, 1854.

The Mosquito Hunt.

Not a sound was heard, but a horrible hum,
As around our chamber we hurried,
In search of the insect whose trumpet and drum
Our delectable slumber had worried.

We sought for it daintily at the dead of the night,
Our coverlets carefully turning,
By the struggling moonbeams misty light,
By our candle dimly burning.

No useless garments confined our breast,
But in simple undress and slippers,
We wandered about like spirits distressed,
Or the sails of piratical skippers.

Short and few were the words we fell all,
Lest the noise should disturb the mosquito,
But we stealthily gaz'd on the white-wash'd walls,
And thought how we had been bit, oh!

We thought as we rose from our restless bed,
And relinquish'd our pleasant pillow,
That we'd not turn until he was dead,
And we were secured from his bill, oh!

But half an hour had seemed to elapse,
Ere we met with the wretch that had bit us,
And raising our boots gave some terrible slap,
That made the mosquito's quietus.

Quickly and gladly we turned from the dead,
And left him all smothered and gory;
We blew out the candle and popped into bed,
Determined to tell you the story.

Anecdotes.

"Jim," said one fast man to another, "it is reported that you left the East on account of your belief."
"How," replied Jim, flattered by the remark, "how's that?"
"Why, a police officer told me that you believed everything you saw belonged to you, and, as the public didn't, you left."

"Why," said a tall youth to a little person in company with half a dozen huge men, "I protest you are so small I did not see you before."
"Very likely," replied the little gentleman, "I am like a sixpence among six copper pennies, not readily perceived, but worth the whole of them."

An old lady having kept a hired man on liver nearly a month, said to him one day—"Why, John, I don't think you like liver."
"Oh! yes," said John; "I like it very well for fifty or sixty meals, but I don't think I'd like it as a steady diet."
The old lady cooked something else for the next meal.

A young lad had been "schooled" severely by his mother, for want of memory. This lad was sent to a grocer for some "salt, pepper and ginger." This he kept repeating, till unluckily falling down, he got up shouting: "I haven't forgot it! I haven't forgot it! tar, pitch and turpentine! That's it—that's it!"

"Well, John," said a man to his son on the day he was one and twenty, "you have got a fool for a master now."
"Yes," said John, "and have had for these twenty years."

A gentleman asked a friend in a somewhat knowing manner: "Pray, sir, did you ever see a rope walk?"
"No," said the response, "but I have seen a cut fish."

"There's a brandy smash," as the wag said, "when a drunkard fell through a pane of glass."

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

Saturday, August 5th, 1854.

"BORN TO NO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE."

MUSTER. The First Division of Massachusetts Volunteer Militia will go into camp on the 8th, 9th and 10th of this month, (next week) in this town, upon the plain at the foot of Mount Wollaston. The site commands a fine view of the harbor, and will be open to the breezes from over the waves. Its elevation makes it free from floods even in heavy rains, and the troops and visitors will have pleasant times. The encampment is called Camp Lincoln, after the first commander of the Division, Gen. Benjamin Lincoln. It is remarkable that since the organization of the militia system in 1786, there have been but eight Major Generals, viz:—Gen. B. Lincoln, 1788; Elijah Crane, 1809; Aaron Capen, 1827; E. W. Bradley, 1836; Appleton Howe, 1839; B. F. Edwards, 1850.

NEW COUNTERFEIT COIN. Dye's Bank Mirror—one of the most excellent publications of the kind published in the country—says a large amount of counterfeit ten cent pieces, are being circulated in New York and Boston, of the most dangerous kind ever invented. They have a Goddess and Liberty Pole, Cap, Stars and date on one side, and United States of America, wreath, and "One Dime" on the other, and appear to be manufactured out of type metal, and are galvanized over. They have the exact weight, size, thickness, and appearance of the genuine, but break as easy as type.

CRAYON PORTRAITS. Personal notices of eminent men are always interesting, and a volume containing sketches of great Americans must be especially valuable to every native of this country. Messrs. DeWitt & Davenport of New York, have just issued a book entitled Crayon Sketches; or, Off Hand Takings, from the pen of Geo. W. Bungay, Esq. of Boston, which we have not the slightest doubt, will prove a great hit. It contains carefully written descriptions of some of the most noticeable Poets, Preachers, Politicians, Prose-writers, &c., of our day, and so well are they touched off, that each one may be called a Pen-Daguerreotype. Moreover, the work is embellished with twenty capital steel engravings, any one of which is a graceful likeness. No American library can be complete without this work, which, from its fair, free and frank style, will make a sensation.

The mechanical execution of the work is truly magnificent. It embraces more than four hundred pages printed with beautiful type, on fine white paper, is substantially and handsomely bound, and elegantly illustrated with twenty portraits in steel.

DeWitt & Davenport, Publishers, 160 and 162 Nassau street, New York City.

NEGRO MINSTRELS. The celebrated band of negro minstrels, known as "Christy's," who gave concerts for twelve years, and most of the time in New York City, lately disbanded. A few months since, George Christy, or George N. Harrington, which is his real name, left the band, having had some little difficulty with Edwin P. Christy, the proprietor, and as was supposed by the public pretty generally, brother of George. There is, however, no relationship existing between the two. George united himself with Wood's band, which are now known as the "George Christy and Wood's Minstrels" and are drawing crowded houses, while the old band have broken up, Ned having lost money since George left. He, however, as it is, retires with a large fortune.

FIFTEEN MINUTES AROUND NEW YORK. A new work from the pen of G. G. Foster, so well known to the public as the author of "New York by Gas Light," &c., will be hailed with pleasure by all who wish to read a most graphic account of everything remarkable and worthy of record in the Great Metropolis. His powers of description are too well known and appreciated to need our praise, and more can be learned in an hour by the perusal of his "Fifteen Minutes," spent among places and with persons known to fame, than without his penetrating genius and eye, could be brought to the view of a stranger in a year—he marks with broad glance all that is wonderful and strange, from the Crystal Palace and the abodes of the rich and the purse-proud, down to the vilest haunts of the vicious and degraded. He paints the truth, "naught extenuating, or setting down aught in malice." All should read it who wish to be posted up in what is going on in the great Babal.

Published and for sale by Dewitt & Davenport of New-York City.

CLAM CHOWDER. Our friend French, of the Granite Saloon, will serve up this afternoon and evening, some of the same kind that he had on hand last Saturday, which was excellent, and in great demand.

HO, YE THIRSTY. During this hot and sultry weather, Dr. Marden has a very pleasant Medicated Beer, which is cooling and wholesome to the system. Go and drink.

Pic-Nic Excursion.

The Unitarian Sunday School Pic-Nic on Thursday last, was largely attended. The day was one of the fairest of the fair—the sun shone brilliantly but not too warm, and almost every body, both young and old, seemed in a happy frame of mind. The cars left the depot at about one o'clock, and after taking aboard quite a large party at the South station, were very full, many being compelled to stand. But the time on the road was short, and the party were quickly at the beautiful grove in the rear of the Old Colony House. The tables were soon spread with a profusion of edibles, which, after laying a while to tempt the hungry, were summarily disposed of. The music of the Weymouth Band fell delightfully on the ear through those fine trees, and added much to the pleasure of those present. At seven o'clock the cars were ready to start, and soon after the party were homeward bound, apparently much gratified with the manner in which they had spent the day.

The following hymns, the first from the pen of Rev. Dr. Lunt, were sung during the afternoon:—

Great Sire of earth and sky!
Thy glorious majesty
Shall now be sung;
Within the shady grove,
A voice of joy and love
Swells loud to heaven above,
From old and young.

While with light hearts, and gay,
We spend the summer-day,
Thus free abroad,
One hallow'd thought we'll send
To greet th' Eternal Friend,
And with our mirth we'll blend
The name of God.

We love beneath the greenwood tree,
To leap and dance and sing;
We love, with merry hearts and free,
To make the forest ring.

'Tis joyful thus in gladness met,
The golden hours to spend—
But shall we in our joy forget
Our Father and our Friend?
Our Father and our dearest Friend,
Our Father and our Friend—
'To Thee we'll raise a song of praise,'
'Our Father and our Friend.

By Him the meadow, hill and grove
Are all with beauty crown'd
Each flower, bright tinted by His love,
Spreads welcome fragrance round.
The cooling breeze, the sun's bright ray
Which health and gladness send,
Are messengers of love to-day
From God, our bounteous Friend.

Our Father and our dearest Friend, &c.
To Him we owe a mother's love,
To Him a father's care;
Through Him the joys of friendship prove,
A teacher's blessings share.
Teachers and friends and Parents dear
Their varied blessings send,
As ministers of mercy here
From God, the children's Friend.

Our Father and our dearest Friend, &c.
And He who decks the lily breast,
Whose love each want supplies,
Has gilded with a heavenly light
Our pathway to the skies.
'Jesus, our Saviour, blessed by thee,'
'In peace our days we'll spend,'
'And in thy face, rejoice to see'
'Our Father and our Friend,'
Our Father and our dearest Friend, &c.

God, who led young Joseph's way,
Guard with innocence our days!
God, who heard young Samuel pray,
Teach our lips to breathe thy praise!
God, who lov'st the sinless heart,
Give us Mary's better part!

We would see Thee everywhere—
In the sky, the sea, the flower;
In the daylight's dazzling glare,
In the evening's starlit hour,
All that's felt, and seen, and heard,
In thy gospel's glorious Word.

Gentle, patient tempers give,
Hearts by others' sufferings moved;
Teach us how like him to live,
Who his foes and slanderers loved;
With him and all mankind,
May we love's great secret find.

Parents, teachers, children, all,
Bound to one immortal home,
Never let thy pilgrims fall,
Nor in desert darkness roam;
Bring us with unflinching feet,
Where the happy spirits meet!

To the land of peaceful streams,
To sweet fields of holy rest,
Where no fading sunset beams
Vanish down the darkening West,
To unchanging light above
Safely lead us, God of Love!

HAYWOOD'S PERSIAN HAIR DYE. James Haywood, 144 Court street, Brooklyn, (N. Y.) has produced an article for dying hair, whisks, &c., to any desired shades, from a brown to a jet black, which is regarded by chemists, as superior in every respect to any thing of the kind heretofore invented. Mr. Haywood is one of the most accomplished, and we may add, artistic hair-dressers in the country, and is so regarded by the elite of New York and Brooklyn. The dye of Mr. Haywood is instantaneous, and remains on the hair as firm and natural as nature itself; it will not injure or stain the skin, it can be used without regard to weather or climate, and none of the objections so frequent with other Dyes, will be experienced in using this.

COAT. The Boston Times says, that persons interested in the price of this article will be glad to learn, that the freight has been reduced half a dollar per ton.

CHASTISEMENT. The United States ship Cyane recently bombarded and destroyed the little town of San Juan de Nicaragua, (Greytown), a "free town," formerly belonging to the Mosquito King, because of the destruction of property by the authorities who refused to indemnify, and also on account of an insult, offered by some person unknown, to the United States Minister to Central America. It was done by order of the government at Washington.

JUDICIAL APPOINTMENT. George P. Sanger, Esq., at present State's Attorney for Suffolk District, has been appointed a Justice of the Court of Common Pleas, to fill the vacancy created by the promotion of Justice Melton to the seat of Chief Justice, in place of Chief Justice Wells, deceased.

THIN CLOTHING. Now is the time to secure bargains in summer clothing. Savil & Co. are selling off their stock at very reduced prices, and such a chance to buy cheap will not probably occur again for some time.—Call and examine their garments and goods.

HYDROPHOBIA. A horse, which had been bitten by a dog about six weeks since, died a few days ago, at Dorchester Upper Mills, with all the signs of hydrophobia. It is reported that two persons were likewise bitten by this rabid animal, but remain as yet in the enjoyment of good health.

ICE CREAM. The lovers of Ice Cream can be gratified at Dr. Marden's every day during the ensuing week. If your motto is "keep cool," try it. Our friends will find it good to the taste as well as refreshing to the feelings.

NEW POST OFFICE. A post office has been established at West Abington, Plymouth County, and H. A. Raymond appointed Postmaster.

For the Patriot.

My Observations.

The other day we were invited by the town officers to accompany them on a visit to the various town buildings and other places of interest;—accordingly at the appointed hour, we repaired to the Town House, where the almshouse cart was in waiting to take us wheresoever we wished to go. We first visited the new cemetery, of which place I will attempt to give a feeble description. No pen, however mighty, much less an insignificant one like mine, can begin to portray the beauties of the place. The grand entrance is magnificent in the extreme, being at once unique, novel, and surprisingly beautiful in outline and finish. [Our village artist has promised me he will make a sketch of it, if he does I will have it engraved, and you shall have the pleasure of giving it to the world through the columns of the Patriot.] In the mean time let me attempt to give your readers some idea of it. The trenches for the foundations are sunk some thirty-four feet below the surface, in order to give sufficient strength for the immense weight above. These trenches are filled with sweepings from the Town hall, school house, &c., consisting in part of broken settees, cuds of tobacco, stumps of cigars, used up spruce gum, &c. After these things had given out, the balance was filled with sand and loam, such as our streets are mended with. These things being well rammed down, formed a very firm basis. The base of the arch, or gateway, consists of oak stumps, from the center of which rises on either side a shaft of red cedar to the height of fifty-three feet six inches and one quarter. Upon the tops of these rests a cross beam four inches square; from the center of this cross beam a stick rises to the height of three feet, on the top of which is a weather-vane representing a monster, part horse and part fish—the whole forming one of the most beautiful gateways we ever saw, not even excepting the grand triumphal arches we have seen in France;—by the way we should have added, that to prevent the thing from blowing over, it is supported by guys after the manner of a derrick. On entering the grounds one can almost imagine himself in a paradise on earth. I think that in the whole course of my long and eventful life I never saw anything so perfectly enchanting. The walks, which are eighteen inches wide, are laid out at right angles, and to prevent their being injured no carriages are allowed to enter the place. The trees, of which a large number have been planted, look thrifty, but for some reason they have no leaves;—it is expected, however, that as wood is high, they will all leave in the course of the season. The flowering shrubs are very vigorous and reflect much credit on the forester. We were shown a specimen of mullen which attained the height of seven inches and sported six leaves; also a stalk of red top grass which looked buxom when examined through a magnifying glass. But we are spinning this out too long, and must stop;—first returning our thanks for many kindnesses received at the hand of the Town Officers. We must also be permitted to say that the Burying Ground Committee have acquitted themselves of their duty in a manner very acceptable to the Town, and are deserving the thanks of the whole community. We think no body of men could have been selected who would have acted as promptly as they have. We cannot be too loud in their praise as faithful, economical servants of the Town. But what is the use of talking, their works speak louder in their praise than we can do.

The Buffalo newspapers are to be published on Sunday and not on Monday, thus preventing labor on the Sabbath.

Progress in England is shown by a recent vote of Parliament admitting dissenters from the established church to study at the University of Oxford.

A provision to enforce temperance in the Navy, by allowing liquors for medicine only, was defeated in Congress, July 27th, by the casting vote of Speaker Boyd of the House.

Poetry.

For the Patriot.
To my Mother in Heaven.
BY JENNY NEW YORK.

I am leaning o'er your grave, mother,
While many years have fled,
Since last I stood upon this ground
Consecrated to the dead!
Fall off my trembling steps, mother,
Have guided your Jenny here,
To weep only as a child can weep,
O'er a much loved mother's bier.
And oft my little hands, mother,
Have gathered flowers wild,
To strew them o'er this grassy mound
As an offering from my child.
But those flowers have perished, mother,
O'ergrown with weeds this bed,
And sunken lies the turf, mother,
Above your lowly head.

The old church on the hill, mother,
Lies mouldering with decay,
And silent is the bell that tolled
Its knell o'er your lifeless clay.
I find all sadly changed, mother,
Save this old willow tree;—
It has stood a mourner, many years,
Now points your grave to me.
Thou hast been my guiding star, mother,
O'er life's ebbing tide;
Each accent from my mother's lips
Has been treasured by her child.
I never by thought done wrong, mother,
But I've felt thy spirit chide;
While oft at midnight's hour, mother,
It keeps vigil by my side.

I'm kneeling beside your grave, mother,
With clasped hands to thee, on high;
Most fervently I pray, mother,
For your blessing on your child.
May it never be given in vain, mother,
But faithful may I prove,
To God, to heaven, to thee, mother,
And thy blessing from above.

Angel Voices.

BY REV. THOMAS B. THAYER.

Mourner, why grieve for the loved friends,
That they are called away?
Why should'st thou weep that God hath changed
Their darkness into day?
They've parted with thee, for a land
More glorious far than this—
The parting may be sad indeed,
The meeting will be bliss.

To die, is but to leave this world
For one more pure and true,
And every light that here goes out
Is kindled there anew.
Yes, in that world of holiness
Where all is pure and bright,
Thou'lt meet the loved and lost of earth
All robed in living light.

Then weep no more, complain no more
Of deeds that death hath done,
For every time that earth hath lost
Then heaven hath gained a son.
Ay, dry thy tears, and bless thy God,
That he hath ope'd the way
That leads through death's dark portal, up
To everlasting day.

Stanzas.

Sit down, and soul, and count
The moments flying;
Come—tell the sweet amount
That's lost by sighing.
How many smiles a score?
Thou laugh and count no more,
For day is dying.
Lie down, sad soul, and weep,
And no more measure
The flight of time, nor weep
The loss of leisure;
But here, by this lone stream,
Lie down, with us, and dream
Of starry treasure.

Anecdotes.

"Good morning, Mr. Smith—on the sick list to-day?"
"Yes, sir, got the ague."
"Do you ever shake?"
"Yes, shake amazingly."
"When do you shake again?"
"Can't say when, shake every day. Why do you ask?"
"O, nothing in particular, only I thought if you shook bad, I'd like to stand by and see if I couldn't shake the fifteen dollars out of your pocket which you have owed me so long."

A gentleman, popping his head through a tailor's shop window, in order to obtain a full view of the fair operatives, exclaimed—
"What o'clock is it?"
Upon which the tailor lifted his lap-board and struck him a blow on the head, answering—
"It has just struck one."

"I spend as much in that house as any other man," said a loafer, addressing a crowd who witnessed his ejection from a coffee house.
"As much what?" inquired a scamp in the crowd.
"As much of my time, sir," was the triumphant reply.

A country schoolmaster began one morning the duties of the day with prayer as usual, but after prayer he went up and asked a little boy why he hadn't shut his eyes during the prayer, when the boy sharply responded, "We are instructed in the Bible to watch as well as pray."

To one who said, "I do not believe there is an honest man in the world," another replied, "It is impossible that one man should know all the world, but quite possible that one may know himself."

$3.00. Extracting 25 cents without, and 50 cents with, the use of ether. All operations warranted, and the finest gold used.

Opinions of the Boston Press.
"The long experience and correct taste of
Dr. Stocking, of this city, eminently qualify
him to set artificial teeth, that look well, feel well, wear well, and work well; and what is rather remarkable, he seems to be better pleased with furnishing good work than with exorbitant prices for it—a trait not common with the profession."—Evening Traveller.
"We advise all toothless persons to call on
Dr. Stocking, of this city, and procure some artificial teeth of his manufacture. We offer
this advice with the more confidence, because whatever he undertakes to do, he does well.
No one who is acquainted with him can doubt that Nature designed him for a dentist of the right stamp."—Morning Post.

"No Dentist among us is better qualified to improve the condition of the mouth, by setting, filling, extracting, cleansing, regulating,
&c. of the teeth, than Dr. Stocking of this city. His reputation for dental skill is too well established to be doubted."—Evening Transcript.

"Dr. Stocking of this city, possesses the right qualifications for his profession,—requiring,
as it does, a combination of patience, care,
skill and gentleness, with a thorough knowledge of all the intricacies of the business."— Boston Journal.

"If any of our readers have got the toothache, and wish to know who can extract it
with the least pain, we should say, Dr. Stocking; or, if they want their teeth filled, and filled right, we should say, by all means go to
Dr. Stocking. And above all, if you wish for artificial teeth that every body calls the perfection of art, he is the one to furnish them, and at a reasonable price."—Daily Times.

CHAPTER I.

"What are you reading, sis?"
"Bleak House."
"A novel?"
"Yes, why not—Dickens' last new novel, and a capital thing it is, too."

The two ladies between whom this conversation passed, were sisters, and nieces of one of the better classes of New England farmers with whom they resided. "Squire Fairbank," without being a very brilliant man, had acquired considerable distinction in the village where he lived, probably because—besides being worth money—he was a straight forward, conservative, reliable man, and had frequently served the town in an acceptable manner, both in the legislature, and as moderator in town meetings. He was the most notable man in the village, and won the title of Squire, which was universally accorded to him, simply by being a very respectable person, and a man of influence.

Susan and Mary Fairbank were orphans, inheriting from their father the very pretty sum of five thousand dollars each. Both had attained their maturity, and, consequently, were in full possession of their portions; untrammelled even by the authority of an indulgent guardian as Squire Fairbank had proved to be.

They had been well educated at a celebrated female seminary in the vicinity of Boston, and as a matter of course had brought home to the quiet village of Popetown many strange notions and remarkable peculiarities. But they were sensible girls in the main, and though their habits and education elevated them above the reigning tone of the place, it was generally conceded that they "knew what was what," and were not a mite more "stuck up" than would naturally be expected.

Mary and Susan were essentially different in temperament and disposition. The former was exceedingly free and open hearted, while the latter was rather disposed to trundle to the formality of the world, or to the circumstance in which she happened to be placed. Mary never asked what the world would say or think, and while her notions of duty were very clearly defined, she chose to be independent and straight forward. People said she took after her father.

Susan, on the contrary, was nicely sensitive to the good opinions of others. She had not the energy to do anything in opposition to popular sentiment. Indeed she was very much like some of the distinguished public servants at Washington who do everything with an eye to re-election or to government patronage.

A short time before our story opens a young minister had been settled in Popetown, and being a single man, "Squire Fairbank had consented, as a special favor, to receive him into his house. The Rev. Mr. Carlisle was universally allowed to be a very promising young man. He was talented, had a graceful elocution, and what pleased the young ladies better still, was decidedly a handsome person. Those who were not much influenced by talent, elocution and personal beauty, thought he was rather bigoted for one so young, and hoped that time would wear off the rough corners of his repulsive theology.

Susan Fairbank was deeply interested in the young clergyman, and as a natural consequence to one of her vacillating temperaments, became deeply interested in spiritual things. We do not believe she had any intention of playing the hypocrite; but her devotion to the young minister involuntarily led her to assume an interest which, if Mr. Carlisle had been old, ugly, or unmarried, she would not have felt.

"A novel, sis! only think of it!" exclaimed Susan, holding up both hands with pious horror.

"Pray, Susan, how long is it since you have possessed this holy repugnance to novels. It was only last winter that I saw you reading 'The Children of the Abbey!' returned Mary, laughing heartily.

"I have not read one since, and I never mean to again."

"Fudge!"
"What do you think Mr. Carlisle would say if he saw you reading a novel?"

"Don't care what he says."

"Why Mary?"

"I don't. If he does not like it, he may whistle, for all me. Why will you make a fool of yourself, Susan? Mr. Carlisle cares no more for you than he does for the fifth wheel of a coach; I would not stand in fear of him for the world."

"Fear of him! I do not fear him; I only respect him as a very good man."

You have set your cap for him! but let me tell you to be more independent, or you will never catch him," said Mary, laughing.

"How absurd you talk."

"Do I?"

Susan felt to biting her finger nails—a very vulgar habit by the way—and to thinking of something else, which her sister had no difficulty in discerning.

"Do you really love him, Susan," asked Mary.

"Love him! no, I never thought of such a thing." Perhaps she never did.

"What makes you go to all the prayer meetings, and mope around the house like a sick owl then?"

"I think I am under conviction," replied Susan, demurely.

"Conviction of what?"

"Conviction of sin."

"Conviction that Mr. Carlisle is a very handsome fellow, more like."

"How absurd you are!"

"And I have heard around town that you are going to join the church."

"I have spoken to Mr. Carlisle about it."

Mary looked serious for a moment.

"If you really feel so, I commend your conduct, but I advise you not to be too hasty. Examine your heart attentively, and do not bring scandal upon the church by having side motives. But here comes Mr. Carlisle," said Mary, as she again turned her attention to the fascinating pages of Bleak House.

CHAPTER II.

The young minister entered the room. Susan had taken up "Saint's Rest," which lay by her and commenced reading where she had left off, when she saw Mr. Carlisle coming up the yard. As he came into the room she laid down the book, and looked as though she had not a friend in the world. The assuming of this appearance was involuntary on her part—it was in accordance with her nature.

Mr. Carlisle seated himself by her side and commenced catechising her in regard to the impression the contents of the book produced upon her mind—whether it afforded her consolation in her troubled mind—and finally whether she really thought she had hope. To all these queries Susan replied in a satisfactory manner, assuring the handsome young shepherd that she had been much edified by her reading.

There was a smile of mischief playing upon the pretty face of Mary, as she peeped over the top of Bleak House to observe them. She could see that Mr. Carlisle engaged in conversation with her sister merely as a professional interest—sincerely, it is true, but with no unusual interest in the penitent. He regarded her as a wandering sheep, whom it was his duty to bring into the fold.

But she compassionated her sister who had deluded herself into the belief that she could win the heart of the shepherd by becoming one of his sheep, and she was provoking enough to tell her that instead of making a sheep, she had made a calf of herself.

When the minister had finished his professional counsel, he turned to Mary. As he did so, an involuntary smile came upon his lips. It was not a smile of a ghostly father, but of a young man who had flesh in his heart, and blood in his veins.

Mary laid down her book, as she noticed his intention to address her.

"What are you reading, Miss Fairbank?" asked he.

"A novel?"

"Yes, sir."

"The jaw of the young minister dropped down two inches."

"O, very much indeed," replied Mary, with wicked enthusiasm, "I admire Dickens, of all the novelists I ever read."

"Do you make a practice of reading novels?"

The minister shook his head.

"Will you allow me to suggest some reading for you, and I shall take the greatest pleasure in lending you the books."

"Thank you."

"Baxter's Call to the Unconverted," is an excellent book for—

"It is so stupid!"

"Mr. Carlisle was horrified."

"I would not be hired to read it."

"Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, perhaps, would suit your taste better."

"I have read it, but don't you call that a novel?"

"An allegory."

"If I mistake not, I saw you reading 'Uncle Tom's Cabin. I am sure that is a novel—and no better than any of Dickens's."

"It is a moral and philanthropic work."

"So are Dickens's works. Indeed I have never read a novel from which a great deal of good might not be obtained, though I know there are such."

"More fictions generally have a debasing tendency."

"I judge novels as I do everything else, by their own merits. If I understand you, Mr. Carlisle, you object to works of fiction, as such, not on account of any evil they may contain."

"Certainly."

"You insist that the book must be true in its narrative in order to be good?"

"I do."

"Then you despise the teachings of Him whom you profess to serve. He spoke in parables—in fiction. I do not understand the Parable of the Son to be a narrative of facts."

"Perhaps not."

"Then why may not Scott, Dickens, Irving, Miss Bremer, and Miss Leslie teach us love and charity through the same medium?"

"Such works vitiate the taste."

"O, it is taste, and not the heart, that is damaged."

"Both—the latter through the former. Let me induce you to read Baxter's Call, and you will then allow that you have obtained more real good from it than from all the works of fiction you have ever read in your life."

"It is too dull and insipid for me. I must draw my inspirations from more sparkling fountains."

"You misjudge the book."

"Perhaps I do: I am not a saint, I am willing to acknowledge; therefore it does not suit me. And I fancy it is so with half the world, who rejecting the counsels of the church, get their wisdom and goodness from works of fiction. They are readable to those whose taste, like mine, has not become sanctified; without them they would read nothing, and thus the world is better for novels."

Mr. Carlisle could not but grant that there was some truth in what Mary said, and tho' he did not in so many words yield the point, an impression was produced upon his mind, which could not fail to soften down the bigotry of his views.

But the merry, fearless, independent tones of the eloquent advocate, went deeper down than the mind, and touched a weak spot in his theological heart. Her pretty sparkling eye, roused and animated by her earnest thought, were irresistible, and Rev. Mr. Carlisle, maugre the carnal nature of the fabricator, actually fell in love with the contemner of Baxter's immortal works.

Mary was undoubtedly a great sinner, but she was a beautiful and spirited girl, for all that. We will not trouble the reader with the ingenious plans that the enamored minister laid that night to reclaim the erring beauty; it is only necessary to say that, within a week, he proposed marriage to her; and that she, out of consideration for her sister, refused to consider the proposal.

CHAPTER III.

Susan was a docile lamb, and her conversation progressed to the entire satisfaction of her spiritual adviser. It was rumored that she was to be "propounded" on the following Sabbath.

Mary had quite as strong a veneration for spiritual things as her sister; but she was too straight forward to be led into imaginary raptures by an extraneous influence. She knew Susan too well to believe her holy aspirations were real, she knew that the poor girl had involuntarily deluded herself. She was not surprised to hear that she had concluded to join the church.

"Susan, you are deceiving yourself. You love the fold for the sake of the shepherd," said she.

"Nay, sister, you wrong me. Can you think me a hypocrite?"

"Not a hypocrite; you have misled yourself."

"I have carefully examined my heart, and I am confident that I am not deluded."

"What would you say if I should tell you that Mr. Carlisle can never love you?"

"I should say that you know nothing about it," replied Susan, unthinkingly, but in an instant she corrected her mistake. "But that has nothing to do with it."

"I fear it has. Tell me honestly, Susan, do you love Mr. Carlisle? I will not laugh at you."

Susan hesitated.

"Be candid, sister."

"I do not love him, but I feel that if he loved me, I could return the affection."

"He does not love you, Susan."

The ambitious "sheep" looked earnestly into the face of her sister.

"How do you know?"

"I do know."

Susan looked pensive and sad.

"What do you know?"

"That he has offered his hand and heart to another."

"The hypocrite!" exclaimed Susan, with a flushed face.

"Why, sis!" and Mary was filled with astonishment, for it appeared from Susan violent ebullition of feeling that the matter had progressed much farther than she had suspected. "Why do you use that pointed word? Did he ever speak to you of love?"

"Never; but he has led me to believe by his constant attentions that he was interested in me."

"That was professional, sis; you have mistaken his zeal to bring you to the fold for love. I warned you of this."

"You did, I am a fool. But to whom has he offered himself?"

"It is a secret."

"Tell me."

"Will you be discreet?"

"I will."

"To me."

"To you! you, who despised Baxter's Call and Saint's Rest!"

"Even so. Extremes meet sometimes."

"I wish you joy, Mary."

"But I declined the offer."

"Why?"

"For your sake; I knew that you loved him."

Susan was deeply affected at the generosity of her sister.

"I do not love him, sister. Do not let me be an obstacle in the way of your happiness."

"I have not said that I loved him."

"But you do."

"I have refused him."

"Nay, he is a noble and good man, besides being handsome and talented. Do not be a fool because I have been. I assure you I am completely cured; I think he is a flirt."

Mary did not think so, and the young minister was too deeply enamored of her, too devotedly admired her wit and beauty, not less than the innate goodness of her heart to be content with the refusal. When he renewed his suit, the spirited girl was more tractable, and in process of time they were married.

Whether Mr. Carlisle ever succeeded in removing these pernicious notions about novels from the mind of his wife, we are unable to say; but we do know that Scott, Dickens and Irving, have found a place on the shelves of his library besides the tomes of theology and history; and we infer that a mutual influence has brought each to adopt more reasonable views of both Baxter and the novelists.

CHAPTER I.

"What are you reading, sis?"
"Bleak House."
"A novel?"
"Yes, why not—Dickens' last new novel, and a capital thing it is, too."

The two ladies between whom this conversation passed, were sisters, and nieces of one of the better classes of New England farmers with whom they resided. "Squire Fairbank," without being a very brilliant man, had acquired considerable distinction in the village where he lived, probably because—besides being worth money—he was a straight forward, conservative, reliable man, and had frequently served the town in an acceptable manner, both in the legislature, and as moderator in town meetings. He was the most notable man in the village, and won the title of Squire, which was universally accorded to him, simply by being a very respectable person, and a man of influence.

Susan and Mary Fairbank were orphans, inheriting from their father the very pretty sum of five thousand dollars each. Both had attained their maturity, and, consequently, were in full possession of their portions; untrammelled even by the authority of an indulgent guardian as Squire Fairbank had proved to be.

They had been well educated at a celebrated female seminary in the vicinity of Boston, and as a matter of course had brought home to the quiet village of Poppletown many strange notions and remarkable peculiarities. But they were sensible girls in the main, and though their habits and education elevated them above the reigning ton of the place, it was generally conceded that they "knew what was what," and were not a mile more "stuck up" than would naturally be expected.

Mary and Susan were essentially different in temperament and disposition. The former was exceedingly free and open hearted, while the latter was rather disposed to truckle to the formality of the world, or to the circumstance in which she happened to be placed. Mary never asked what the world would say or think, and while her notions of duty were very clearly defined, she chose to be independent and straight forward. People said she took after her father.

Susan, on the contrary, was nicely sensitive to the good opinions of others. She had not the energy to do anything in opposition to popular sentiment. Indeed she was very much like some of the distinguished public servants at Washington who do everything with an eye to re-election or to government patronage.

A short time before our story opens a young minister had been settled in Poppletown, and being a single man, "Squire Fairbank had consented, as a special favor, to receive him into his house. The Rev. Mr. Carlisle was universally allowed to be a very promising young man. He was talented, had a graceful elocution, and what pleased the young ladies better still, was decidedly a handsome person. Those who were not much influenced by talent, elocution and personal beauty, thought he was rather bigoted for one so young, and hoped that time would wear off the rough corners of his repulsive theology.

Susan Fairbank was deeply interested in the young clergyman, and as a natural consequence to one of her vacillating temperaments, became deeply interested in spiritual things. We do not believe she had any intention of playing the hypocrite; but her devotion to the young minister involuntarily led her to assume an interest which, if Mr. Carlisle had been old, ugly, or unmarried, she would not have felt.

"A novel, sis! only think of it!" exclaimed Susan, holding up both hands with pious horror.

"Pray, Susan, how long is it since you have possessed this holy repugnance to novels. It was only last winter that I saw you reading 'The Children of the Abby!' returned Mary, laughing heartily.

"I have not read one since, and I never mean to again."

"Fudge!"
"What do you think Mr. Carlisle would say if he saw you reading a novel?"

"Don't care what he says."

"Why Mary!"

"I don't. If he does not like it, he may whistle, for all me. Why will you make a fool of yourself, Susan? Mr. Carlisle cares no more for you than he does for the fifth wheel of a coach; I would not stand in fear of him for the world."

"Fear of him! I do not fear him; I only respect him as a very good man."

You have set your cap for him! but let me tell you to be more independent, or you will never catch him," said Mary, laughing.

"How absurd you talk."

"Do I?"

Susan fell to biting her finger nails—a very vulgar habit by the way—and to thinking of something else, which her sister had no difficulty in discerning.

"Do you really love him, Susan," asked Mary.

"Love him! no, I never thought of such a thing." Perhaps she never did.

"What makes you go to all the prayer meetings, and mope around the house like a sick owl then?"

"I think I am under conviction," replied Susan, demurely.

"Conviction of what?"

"Conviction of sin."

"Conviction that Mr. Carlisle is a very handsome fellow, more like."

"How absurd you are!"

"And I have heard around town that you are going to join the church."

"I have spoken to Mr. Carlisle about it."

"Mary looked serious for a moment."

"If you really feel so, I commend your conduct, but I advise you not to be too hasty. Examine your heart attentively, and do not bring scandal upon the church by having side motives. But here comes Mr. Carlisle," said Mary, as she again turned her attention to the fascinating pages of Bleak House.

CHAPTER II.

The young minister entered the room. Susan had taken up 'Saint's Rest,' which lay by her and commenced reading where she had left off, when she saw Mr. Carlisle coming up the yard. As he came into the room she laid down the book, and looked at though she had not a friend in the world. The assuming of this appearance was involuntary on her part—it was in accordance with her nature.

Mr. Carlisle seated himself by her side and commenced catechizing her in regard to the impression the contents of the book produced upon her mind—whether it afforded her consolation in her troubled mind—and finally whether she really thought she had hope. To all these queries Susan replied in a satisfactory manner, assuring the handsome young shepherd that she had been much edified by her reading.

There was a smile of mischief playing upon the pretty face of Mary, as she peeped over the top of Bleak House to observe them. She could see that Mr. Carlisle engaged in conversation with her sister merely as a professional interest—sincerely, it is true, but with no unusual interest in the penitent. He regarded her as a wandering sheep, whom it was his duty to bring into the fold.

But she compassionated her sister who had deluded herself into the belief that she could win the heart of the shepherd by becoming one of his sheep, and she was provoking enough to tell her that instead of making a sheep, she had made a calf of herself.

When the minister had finished his professional counsel, he turned to Mary. As he did so, an involuntary smile came upon his lips. It was not a smile of a ghostly father, but of a young man who had flesh in his heart, and blood in his veins.

Mary laid down her book, as she noticed his intention to address her.

"What are you reading, Miss Fairbank?" asked he.

"A novel?"

"Yes, sir."

The jaw of the young minister dropped down two inches.

"O, very much indeed," replied Mary, with wicked enthusiasm, "I admire Dickens, of all the novelists I ever read."

"Do you make a practice of reading novels?"

"I seldom read anything else. I did read 'Reveries of a Bachelor,' and a 'Dream of Life.'"

The minister shook his head.

"Will you allow me to suggest some reading for you, and I shall take the greatest pleasure in lending you the books."

"Thank you."

"Baxter's Call to the Unconverted," is an excellent book for—

"It is so stupid!"

"Mr. Carlisle was horrified."

"I would not be hired to read it."

"Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, perhaps, would suit your taste better."

"I have read it, but don't you call that a novel?"

"An allegory."

"If I mistake not, I saw you reading 'Uncle Tom's Cabin. I am sure that is a novel—and no better than any of Dickens's."

"It is a moral and philanthropic work."

"So are Dickens' works. Indeed I have never read a novel from which a great deal of good might not be obtained, though I know there are such."

"Mere fictions generally have a debasing tendency."

"I judge novels as I do everything else, by their own merits. If I understand you, Mr. Carlisle, you object to works of fiction, as such, not on account of any evil they may contain."

"Certainly."

"You insist that the book must be true in its narrative in order to be good?"

"I do."

"Then you despise the teachings of Him whom you profess to serve. He spoke in parables—in fiction. I do not understand the Prodigal Son to be a narrative of facts."

"Perhaps not."

"Then why may not Scott, Dickens, Irving, Miss Bremer, and Miss Leslie teach us love and charity through the same medium?"

"Such works vitiate the taste."

"O, it is taste, and not the heart, that is damaged."

"Both—the latter through the former. Let me induce you to read Baxter's Call, and you will then allow that you have obtained more real good from it than from all the works of fiction you have ever read in your life."

"It is too dull and insipid for me. I must draw my inspirations from more sparkling fountains."

"You misjudge the book."

"Perhaps I do: I am not a saint, I am willing to acknowledge; therefore it does not suit me. And I fancy it is so with half the world, who rejecting the counsels of the church, get their wisdom and goodness from works of fiction. They are readable to those whose taste, like mine, has not become sanctified; without them they would read nothing, and thus the world is better for novels."

Mr. Carlisle could not but grant that there was some truth in what Mary said, and though he did not in so many words yield the point, an impression was produced upon his mind, which could not fail to soften down the bigotry of his views.

But the merry, fearless, independent tones of the eloquent advocate, went deeper down than the mind, and touched a weak spot in his theological heart. Her pretty sparkling eye, roused and animated by her earnest thought, were irresistible, and Rev. Mr. Carlisle, maugre the carnal nature of the fair debater, actually fell in love with the contemner of Baxter's immortal works.

Mary was undoubtedly a great sinner, but she was a beautiful and spirited girl, for all that. We will not trouble the reader with the ingenious plans that the enamored minister laid that night to reclaim the erring beauty; it is only necessary to say that, within a week, he proposed marriage to her; and that she, out of consideration for her sister, refused to consider the proposal.

CHAPTER III.

Susan was a docile lamb, and her conversation progressed to the entire satisfaction of her spiritual adviser. It was rumored that she was to be 'propounded' on the following Sabbath.

Mary had quite as strong a veneration for spiritual things as her sister; but she was too straight forward to be led into imaginary raptures by an extraneous influence. She knew Susan too well to believe her holy aspirations were real, she knew that the poor girl had involuntarily deluded herself. She was not surprised to hear that she had concluded to join the church.

"Susan, you are deceiving yourself. You love the fold for the sake of the shepherd," said she.

"Nay, sister, you wrong me. Can you think me a hypocrite?"

"Not a hypocrite; you have misled yourself."

"I have carefully examined my heart, and I am confident that I am not deluded."

"What would you say if I should tell you that Mr. Carlisle can never love you?"

"I should say that you know nothing about it," replied Susan, unthinkingly, but in an instant she corrected her mistake. "But that has nothing to do with it."

Susan hesitated.

"Be candid, sister."

"I do not love him, but I feel that if he loved me, I could return the affection."

"He does not love you, Susan."

The ambitious 'sheep' looked earnestly into the face of her sister.

"How do you know?"

"I do know."

Susan looked pensive and sad.

"What do you know?"

"That he has offered his hand and heart to another."

"The hypocrite!" exclaimed Susan, with a flushed face.

"Why, sis!" and Mary was filled with astonishment, for it appeared from Susan's violent ebullition of feeling that the matter had progressed much further than she had suspected.

"Why do you use that pointed word? Did he ever speak to you of love?"

"Never; but he has led me to believe by his constant attentions that he was interested in me."

"That was professional, sis; you have mistaken his zeal to bring you to the fold for love. I warned you of this."

"You did, I am a fool. But to whom has he offered himself?"

"It is a secret."

"Tell me."

"Will you be discreet?"

"I will."

"To me."

"To you! you, who despised Baxter's Call and Saint's Rest!"

"Even so. Extremes meet sometimes."

"I wish you joy, Mary."

"But I declined the offer."

"Why?"

"For your sake; I knew that you loved him."

Susan was deeply affected at the generosity of her sister.

"I do not love him, sister. Do not let me be an obstacle in the way of your happiness."

"I have not said that I loved him."

"But you do."

"I have refused him."

"Nay, he is a noble and good man, besides being handsome and talented. Do not be a fool because I have been. I assure you I am completely cured; I think he is a dirt."

Mary did not think so, and the young minister was too deeply enamored of her, too devotedly admired her wit and beauty, not less than the innate goodness of her heart to be content with the refusal. When he renewed his suit, the spirited girl was more tractable, and in process of time they were married.

Whether Mr. Carlisle ever succeeded in removing these pernicious notions about novels from the mind of his wife, we are unable to say; but we do know that Scott, Dickens and Irving have found a place on the shelves of his library besides the tomes of theology and history; and we infer that a mutual influence has brought each to adopt more reasonable views of both Baxter and the novelists.

Ladies' Dresses.

The upper portions of ladies' dresses now-a-days, are cut just a little below the line of decency. They are a little too much given to openness of expression—both dress and women—revealing either a blind infatuation in submitting to the decrees of fashion, or a looseness of moral character, unfit for the common walks of life.

Ladies' dresses are cut very low, as any man may see, who has a pair of roving eyes, or may feel if his bosom is susceptible in the least to objects exciting, though veiled under lace, &c.

Fashion, generally sancy, during tended for food. The great point, already referred to, must not be lost sight of, viz., to be sure the fruit is fully ripe, and be moderate in the use of it.—Boston Med. Journal.

George Washington.

His published correspondence is a revelation of the highest virtue and the greatest capacity for the several stations which he filled. He was in all things honest and just, truthful and dignified, liberal and modest, courteous and gentlemanly, and hence the good opinion which all true men everywhere felt for GEORGE WASHINGTON when he was alive and which they retain now that he is no more. The following letter is a model one for the example it gives of the true mode of living at home, and we need such examples from just such high authority in these days of extravagance, folly, and selfishness. The letter is now for the first time published, and was written to Tobias Lear, in England, in 1794. Washington gives the following reasons why he has empowered Mr. Lear to sell a portion of his landed estate:—

"I have no scruple in disclosing to you that my motives to these sales are to reduce my income, be it more or less, to speciality—that the remainder of my days may be by me more tranquil and free from care, and that I may be enabled, knowing what my dependence is, to do as much good as my resources will admit; for although in the estimation of the world I possess a good and clear estate, yet so unproductive is it that I am oftentimes ashamed to refuse aid which cannot afford unless I sell part of it to answer this purpose. Besides I have another motive which earnestly wish for these things—it is indeed more powerful than all the rest—namely, to liberate a certain species of property which I possess very repugnantly to my own feelings, but which imperious necessity compels until I can substitute some other expedient by which expenses not in my power to avoid (however well disposed I may be to do it) can be defrayed."

No one, after this disclosure of Washington's financial situation, can accuse him of parsimony. It evidences the same high integrity and thoughtful honesty which he displayed at the head of our armies and in the Presidential chair.

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

Saturday, August 12th, 1854.

"BORN TO NO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE."

To Editors and Publishers.

The Editors and Publishers of newspapers in Norfolk and Plymouth Counties are hereby notified that a meeting will be held at Young's Coffee House, Cornhill Square, (rear of Joy's Building), in Boston, on Monday, the 21st inst., at 11 o'clock A. M. It is to be hoped that every paper will be represented.

Camp Lincoln.

With the notes of "The girl I left behind me," and "Jordan an hard road to trample," still lingering in our ears, as they come to us from the shrill life and mellow notes of the bugle; with our eyes, mouth, head, ears, nose and clothes filled with dust, and still deafened by the din of the passing multitude, we sit down to write our chapter on the muster field, or as it has been modernized, "Division Encampment."

It was ordered to commence on Tuesday and continue until Thursday night, but as early as Monday the baggage began to arrive as well as the usual accompaniments of a camp. The ground selected was at the foot of Mt. Wollaston, and from the commander's quarters presented a picturesque, and highly animated spectacle—the broken, rough character of the field, adding much to the interest of the movements, and greatly enhancing the beauty of the whole. From the rear of Major General Edmonds's quarters a fine view was obtained of Boston Harbor and a large tract of surrounding territory. The spot seemed admirably adapted to the comfort of the command, although there was but little opportunity afforded for the public to obtain a view of the evolutions of the troops.

The encampment was nearly in form of the letter L, with line fronting the North and the flank of the L on the right, looking down the front. In honor of Benj. Lincoln, who at an early period in the history of the M. V. M. commanded the Division, the camp was called Camp Lincoln.

On Tuesday, at about 11 o'clock, the line was formed and contained some forty companies—making, including the cavalry, an aggregate of some eighteen hundred men.

On Wednesday, the evolutions of the line were preceded by the morning dress parade, the review, and the drill by brigades, regiments, battalions and companies.

The Flying Artillery, under command of Major Cobb, were for the first time afforded an opportunity of displaying the perfections of their drill, and created universal surprise by the velocity and precision of movement.

The outer line of the guard was so far removed from the parade ground, that no one outside was able to hear or see, but by the courtesy of the Division Engineer, John H. Reed, Esq., we received a pass and were permitted to witness the parade. It was highly creditable to all, yet our inexperienced eye could readily detect some imperfections of drill and lack of discipline. Among those, however, who are justly entitled to special notice were two companies, commanded by brother editors—"The Tigers," Boston Light Infantry, Capt. Rogers, of the Boston Journal, and "The Tigers," Boston Light Infantry, Capt. Rogers, of the Boston Journal. The Stone business, however, is the most reliable and bountiful source of the prosperity of this town, and will be for a long time to come. Stone constitutes the great staple. Whatever can be done to the advantage of the Stone business, ought to be done. There is one obstacle to be surmounted, either at the expense of the town, or of individuals connected with the Stone business. There is a growing necessity for a good road for the conveyance of stone from the quarries to the Quincy Point. There is need of a flag-stone road, or a McAdamized road, or a railroad, to facilitate and cheapen the carrying stones from the quarries. So long ago as when the "Quincy Railway," so called, which runs from the neighborhood of Willard's Ledge to the Neponset river, was in contemplation, exertions were made to build a railroad to the Quincy Point. It was objected to, on the part of the owners of quarries, and stone-contractors, on the ground that it would put the entire Stone business in the hands of a few men, and that was the chief reason which defeated the scheme. The road was finally built to the Neponset and proved a failure. It has recently passed into the hands of enterprising men, and may yet prove to be of some value. The shallow water of the Neponset, preventing the approach of large vessels at the terminus of the road, will always be an obstacle to the transaction of a heavy business on that road.

The water at the Quincy Point is deep enough for large vessels, and the navigation of ships from the Boston Light House channel to Quincy Point is no more difficult than to Long Wharf, while the navigation of the Neponset is impeded by its windings and tortuous channel and its narrow and shallow waters.

The Stone business of Quincy is somewhat affected by the fact that rough stones can be transported from Rockport and other places more cheaply than from this town, because little or no expense is incurred in bringing such stone within reach of vessels. We know of no means of removing this obstacle in the way of our Stone business, than by building a good and substantial road from the quarries to Quincy Point. The course of this road has been laid out by nature. Beginning at Willard's Ledge and running through Copeland, Water and Liberty streets, a town road is already made. It only remains for the town to build a road from the termination of Liberty street, on the Brintree and Weymouth Turnpike, to the Quincy Point road, near the School House. Such a road would be nearly level—and there would be no high ascents to drag up the stones. The construction of this road would be cheap, and the facilities it would afford for carrying stones would be of great value.

THE FULL COURT. The bench of the Court of Common Pleas of Massachusetts, is now constituted as follows: Chief Justice Edward Mellen, appointed Dec. 17, 1849. Justices Horatio Byington, Feb. 21, 1848. Jonathan C. Perkins, July 7, 1848. Eben R. Hoar, Aug. 2, 1849. Henry W. Bishop, July 8, 1851. George N. Briggs, 1853. George P. Sanger, July 28, 1854.

TEMPERANCE GATHERING. The Plymouth and Norfolk County Temperance Societies will hold a Mass Union Convention, at the Grove, in Abington, on Tuesday next, Aug. 15th, at 10 o'clock A. M. Rev. Dr. Beecher, Rev. Messrs. Pierpont, Ryder and Stowe, will address the meeting.

Occasionally it would appear that the Light Artillery were overcome. They would then, almost instantly, do the "dismounting" which makes their whole material look like a strewn wreck of lumber. The cavalry then protect the ground. Pretty soon the Artillery return with fresh men and horses. Up go all the fragments together again, and the firing recommences "just like blazes."

The infantry then make a sally from the valley, and the supposed enemy is beaten.

These splendidly performed movements of the Light Artillery were ordered by Maj. General Edmonds, without any preconcert with Capt. Cobb, and the applause was unanimous with every beholder.

During several of the rounds fired, we timed the consecutive reloadings at from three to four seconds!

The muster passed off with much less dissipation than on previous like occasions, and all, both soldier and citizen, speak in favorable terms.

CHEERING. The Salem Gazette truly remarks, that it is some comfort, in the midst of the present high prices of food, to see reason for a well grounded assurance of great abundance and reasonable prices, not many months ahead. The papers from the Northwestern States assure us, that this is to be a year of agricultural fatness. All the various crops, without an exception, promise a yield scarcely even equalled in any single particular.

Another very important element, in the abundance of our future supplies, is the fact that California is rapidly becoming an agricultural as well as a mining country. Very soon, an entire stop must be put to the export of provisions to that quarter, and the thousands of tons thus kept at home cannot fail to have a sensible effect upon the market. These anticipations have already begun to make an impression upon wholesale prices, and the probability is, that the tide has already fairly begun to turn.

KEEP GUESSING. The editor of the Gloucester Chronicle, Dr. Bacon, thinks that the article in a late number of the Patriot, "Native American," was written by either O. A. Brownson or Rev. J. T. Roddan. Dr. B. you must penetrate further than nine inches into Jordan to guess the author's name.

Stone Business.

Boot and shoe making is one of our leading interests. Ship-building is likely to become another. The Stone business, however, is the most reliable and bountiful source of the prosperity of this town, and will be for a long time to come. Stone constitutes the great staple. Whatever can be done to the advantage of the Stone business, ought to be done. There is one obstacle to be surmounted, either at the expense of the town, or of individuals connected with the Stone business. There is a growing necessity for a good road for the conveyance of stone from the quarries to the Quincy Point. There is need of a flag-stone road, or a McAdamized road, or a railroad, to facilitate and cheapen the carrying stones from the quarries. So long ago as when the "Quincy Railway," so called, which runs from the neighborhood of Willard's Ledge to the Neponset river, was in contemplation, exertions were made to build a railroad to the Quincy Point. It was objected to, on the part of the owners of quarries, and stone-contractors, on the ground that it would put the entire Stone business in the hands of a few men, and that was the chief reason which defeated the scheme. The shallow water of the Neponset, preventing the approach of large vessels at the terminus of the road, will always be an obstacle to the transaction of a heavy business on that road.

The water at the Quincy Point is deep enough for large vessels, and the navigation of ships from the Boston Light House channel to Quincy Point is no more difficult than to Long Wharf, while the navigation of the Neponset is impeded by its windings and tortuous channel and its narrow and shallow waters.

The Stone business of Quincy is somewhat affected by the fact that rough stones can be transported from Rockport and other places more cheaply than from this town, because little or no expense is incurred in bringing such stone within reach of vessels. We know of no means of removing this obstacle in the way of our Stone business, than by building a good and substantial road from the quarries to Quincy Point. The course of this road has been laid out by nature. Beginning at Willard's Ledge and running through Copeland, Water and Liberty streets, a town road is already made. It only remains for the town to build a road from the termination of Liberty street, on the Brintree and Weymouth Turnpike, to the Quincy Point road, near the School House. Such a road would be nearly level—and there would be no high ascents to drag up the stones. The construction of this road would be cheap, and the facilities it would afford for carrying stones would be of great value.

THE FULL COURT. The bench of the Court of Common Pleas of Massachusetts, is now constituted as follows: Chief Justice Edward Mellen, appointed Dec. 17, 1849. Justices Horatio Byington, Feb. 21, 1848. Jonathan C. Perkins, July 7, 1848. Eben R. Hoar, Aug. 2, 1849. Henry W. Bishop, July 8, 1851. George N. Briggs, 1853. George P. Sanger, July 28, 1854.

TEMPERANCE GATHERING. The Plymouth and Norfolk County Temperance Societies will hold a Mass Union Convention, at the Grove, in Abington, on Tuesday next, Aug. 15th, at 10 o'clock A. M. Rev. Dr. Beecher, Rev. Messrs. Pierpont, Ryder and Stowe, will address the meeting.

Occasionally it would appear that the Light Artillery were overcome. They would then, almost instantly, do the "dismounting" which makes their whole material look like a strewn wreck of lumber. The cavalry then protect the ground. Pretty soon the Artillery return with fresh men and horses. Up go all the fragments together again, and the firing recommences "just like blazes."

The infantry then make a sally from the valley, and the supposed enemy is beaten.

These splendidly performed movements of the Light Artillery were ordered by Maj. General Edmonds, without any preconcert with Capt. Cobb, and the applause was unanimous with every beholder.

During several of the rounds fired, we timed the consecutive reloadings at from three to four seconds!

The muster passed off with much less dissipation than on previous like occasions, and all, both soldier and citizen, speak in favorable terms.

CHEERING. The Salem Gazette truly remarks, that it is some comfort, in the midst of the present high prices of food, to see reason for a well grounded assurance of great abundance and reasonable prices, not many months ahead. The papers from the Northwestern States assure us, that this is to be a year of agricultural fatness. All the various crops, without an exception, promise a yield scarcely even equalled in any single particular.

Another very important element, in the abundance of our future supplies, is the fact that California is rapidly becoming an agricultural as well as a mining country. Very soon, an entire stop must be put to the export of provisions to that quarter, and the thousands of tons thus kept at home cannot fail to have a sensible effect upon the market. These anticipations have already begun to make an impression upon wholesale prices, and the probability is, that the tide has already fairly begun to turn.

KEEP GUESSING. The editor of the Gloucester Chronicle, Dr. Bacon, thinks that the article in a late number of the Patriot, "Native American," was written by either O. A. Brownson or Rev. J. T. Roddan. Dr. B. you must penetrate further than nine inches into Jordan to guess the author's name.

KEEP GUESSING. The editor of the Gloucester Chronicle, Dr. Bacon, thinks that the article in a late number of the Patriot, "Native American," was written by either O. A. Brownson or Rev. J. T. Roddan. Dr. B. you must penetrate further than nine inches into Jordan to guess the author's name.

Some Remarks.

Ma. Editor.—If there existed any doubt in the minds of your readers that this is a great country, and that we are a great people, it must be dispelled on reading the communication signed "A Native American," in the Patriot of July 29. The writer is evidently a "progressist," and though his views on political questions may be thought extreme opinions, they are no more than the legitimate conclusions to which the principles of the "new" party lead, and to which all those who join that party must come at last.

Many of those who call for the organization of this new party now, were loudest in their denunciations of a coalition two years ago; it was "unprincipled," "corrupt," a mere "truck and dicker trade in places" then, what do they call it now, when they are trying to fit the boot on the other leg?

And what a heterogeneous gathering there will be in the "new party." Tariff Whigs, and Free Trade Democrats; Whigs who denounced Webster, and refused to allow him to speak in Faneuil Hall, and "Webster Whigs," who voted for him after he was dead; National Democrats who hate the Irish, and Coalition Democrats who hate the Irish; Know-nothings, who hate all foreigners, and Know-nothings who hate only Catholic foreigners, and in whose eyes it is no virtue to have your ancestors Americans born, for four generations, if they have the impudence to believe in the Catholic religion; and to crown the whole, the poor Free-soilers, who are playing their last card, and who are trying to make it a trump; to them, at least, the Nebraska Bill was a Godsend. To one of these two last parties I think your correspondent belongs, for it is among them you will find your true tyrant, the petty despot who lords it over those who are in his power, and fawns on those from whom he expects to gain any thing.

The opposition to (or to call it by its right name the oppression of) Catholics forms the creed of this "new party." This is assuming a formidable aspect now, and the Know-nothings boast of several victories, and expect to carry the Fall elections through the country. They will be the leaders in the "new party," and will control its action, and in every town where it is successful, some fifth rate snob will dictate to his neighbors what they shall say, and what they must do, to obtain favor from the clique. I suppose "A Native American" thinks he is to be dictator of Quincy he selects his slaves with so much complacency. Will it not be a pity if he is disappointed, and some one else supplants him in the popular favor. Perhaps he may have read some time that Aristides himself was banished by the popular voice. It may be that the Aristides of Quincy, may write his own name on the shell, we should then be at a loss for an oracle in Town meeting.

The arguments by which he attempts to fortify his case are no better than those offered by all his party. He was evidently born on the wrong side of the line; he ought to be the son of one of those old Norman Lords, who think themselves "the higher order," as it is he expects to own slaves, Irish or German, or poor Yankee folks will suit him; he may by some chance own a grandson of Lafayette, or DeKalb, or of Montgomery, either would look well, slaves in Quincy.

ON ACCOUNT OF IMPORTANT CHANGES

—IN OUR—

Business Arrangements

BEFORE ANOTHER SPRING,

WE have determined to REDUCE, as rapidly as possible,

OUR PRESENT

Poetry.

For the Patriot.

On the Death of little Tommy Brown.

DEDICATED TO HIS PARENTS. BY JENNY.

Thou wert lovely in death, those pale marble features;
But rival in whiteness the robes of the dead—
So placid thy smile, methought thou wert sleeping—
Though sad hearts were weeping around thy death bed.

Bright hopes, fondly cherished, thine youthful brow circled,
Scarce blossomed ere perished upon thy cold breast
The smiles that so sweetly "mid rosy lips nestled—
Are fled, ever chilled by the cold hand of death.

Thou wert born for a day, bright bud, of rare promise;
Your leaves scarce unfolded, ere your infant star set;

Thou hast passed like a dream—like a meteor before us—
While thy spirit has soared to its haven of rest.

He was loved upon earth, he'll be treasured in heaven,
For such are the jewels God gathereth there,
Far too precious for earth—no power here could save him;

He sleeps calm sleep—he's free from all care.

O, weep no more parents, but list the sweet music
That calls now your darling, your cherub above,
As they bear now his spirit, he joins in the chorus,
Supported by angels, bright angels of love.

Weep no more, fond parents, for your first born,
Your pride,
But gaze at theasket that stands by your side;
There's still other jewels, though the brightest has left,

To sing heavenly anthems in the home of the blest.

It Isn't All in Bringing Up.

Let folks say what they will;

To silver scour a pewter cup—

It will be sweeter still.

E'en he of old, wise Solomon,

Who said, "Train up a child,"

If I mistake not, had a son

Proved rattle-brained and wild.

A man of mark who fain would pass

For lord of sea and land,

May have the training of a son,

And bring him up full grand;

May give him all the wealth of lore,

Of college and of school,

Yet, after all, may make no more

Than just a decent fool.

If it were all in "bringing up,"

In counsel and restraint,

Some rascals had been honest men—

I'd been myself a saint.

Oh! 'tisn't all "bringing up,"

It is the mind—the will;

Neglect may dim a silver cup—

It will be silver still.

To my Cigar.

When, in the lonely evening hour,

Attended by thy bees,

O'er history's varied page I pore

Man's fate in thine I see.

Oh as thy snowy column grows,

Then breaks, and falls away—

I trace how mighty realms arose,

And tumbled to decay.

Life is brief, and swiftly rolled,

And time's the wasting breath,

That, late or early, we behold

Gives all to dusty death.

And what is he who smokes thee now?

A little moving heap,

That, soon, like thee, to fate must bow—

With thee in dust must sleep.

But though thy ashes downward go,

Thy essence rolls on high;

Thus, though my body soon may die,

My soul shall cleave the sky.

Anecdotes.

"Does this razor go easy?" asked a barber of a victim, who was writhing under his clumsy instrument, whose chief recommendation was a strong handle.

"Well," replied the poor fellow, "that depends upon what you call this operation. If you're skinning me it goes tolerable easy, but if it's shaving, it goes de-evil-hard!"

An Irishman about to enter the army, was asked by one of the recruiting officers, "Well, sir, when you get into battle will you fight or run?" "By my faith," replied the Irishman, with a comic twist of the countenance, "I'll be either doin', yer honor, as the majority of ye does."

"We must be unanimous," said Hancock, on the occasion of signing the Declaration of Independence; "there must be no pulling different ways." "Yes," answered Franklin, "we must all hang together, or most assuredly we shall all hang separately."

A dandy lawyer remarked that the weather was so excessively hot, that when he put his head into a basin it fairly boiled.

"Then, sir," replied a dirty-looking Hibernian, "you have call'd your head soup at very little expense."

Miscellaneous.

The Best of all the Fairy Stories.

Once upon a time, a man, whose name we will call Alchymy, was digging in an out of the way corner of a laboratory. He was surrounded by a variety of strange old shaped implements—crucibles, vials, alembics, retorts, and cisterns. Upon a small but powerful furnace, which was glowing with a red heat, there stood a vessel which was spuming forth a gaseous vapor which was carefully entrapped by means of a cooling apparatus, and when condensed was conveyed away by siphons and conduct-pipes into a flagon of considerable dimensions. Altogether the strange, haggard, thoughtful look of the man, and the mysterious-looking tools, and the glare of the heated furnace, made the place appear more like the haunt of some wizard or necromancer, than the study of an alchemist; and his apparatus was certainly more suggestive of a distillery of poison than good and wholesome drinks.

However, he was evidently bent upon either hiding or burying some potion or subtle essence he had just made, for a vessel containing a ruby-colored liquid was standing close by the hole in which he was at work. But as it was the custom of some of the early alchemists to bury certain essences in the earth from the commencement to the end of the quadrature of the moon, in order that nature might perfect their labors, the old man dug away with a vigor that was more in unison with youth than age. But suddenly he struck his spade against some hard substance, and stopping, he said, "Holla! I have either found a box of gold, or a jar of transmuting fluid, buried here by my predecessor. Ah! ah!" he went on chuckling, "I always thought I should find something in this old laboratory if I only dug deep enough."

The old fellow went on leisurely removing the earth, every now and then stopping to examine his prize; and at length he had removed the soil from the obstacle, and then he ascertained that he had found a glass bottle, something like those upon his own shelves, and which one sees now-a-days in our chemists' shops; and we stand and stare at their flattened sides, long scraggy necks, and mysterious signs, as intently as Alchymy did at the one he had so unexpectedly found. The old man was, of course, very much delighted with his treasure-trove, for he expected to reap the reward of some alchemist's labors, who had probably died, and made no sign of the secret he had left in his laboratory. At first he handled it and examined it curiously, then he tried to guess at its contents, and then he did what most sensible people would have done first, he looked at the cork and discovered that it was carefully and heavily sealed.

It was not, however, the golden seal of Solomon, that was stamped upon the bottle, as that seal was only used, according to Eastern historians, when it was necessary to confine a powerful genie; but it was a seal of great efficacy nevertheless, for it was the seal of Prudence, the meek-eyed damsel of Wisdom; and the device exhibited the beautiful daughter of Temperance, offering a goblet of water to Exercise, and it was struck in a virgin wax.

Alchymy looked at the bottle again and again; presently he held it up to the light, and then he saw that it contained a bright, clear liquid; but somehow, though it looked even brighter and clearer than water, yet there was a juicy, oily humor, lurking and working about in the bottle, that told the old man that the vessel contained a mysterious and subtle essence. Foiled in gratifying his curiosity by the means he had adopted, he held the bottle to his ear after he had shaken it well. "Ah!" said he, "I thought so," and he appeared not to be disappointed, for at first he thought he heard low murmurs, that gurgled forth from the elastic bubbles given off by the volatile essence that had now begun to ferment from the shaking it had received. In the excitement of the moment the phrenicized imagination of the alchemist heard half-formed words, broken expressions, composed of curses, blessings, oaths and entreaties; but the noise was as indescribable as bits of dreams, and, like a tale mouthed by a maniac, was full of sound and fury, and signified nothing that was intelligible.

And now a cold trembling crept over the old man, yet he could not help listening; he felt entranced, spell-bound, for the murmurs within the bottle seemed to hold communion with himself, and to be answered from the very depths of his brain. He tried to speak, to utter a counter-charm—he made his cabalistic sign, but to no purpose; for his tongue refused to give voice to the strange workings and yearnings within him, and an awful consciousness grew up in his own mind that a subtle spirit in his own heart was conversing with subtle spirits in the mysterious bottle.

His first impulse was to fly; his second was to tear away the seal with which Prudence had covered the neck of the bottle. For an instant he hesitated; but in a rash moment, acting under the influence of some unaccountable spell, he gave the seal a wrench, and settled the business. For a few moments Alchymy stood somewhat astonished at his own temerity, as he started back instinctively, and placed the open bottle upon the floor of the laboratory. But as nothing very alarming ensued, he gradually took courage, and approached the vessel; and then he discovered that a subtle and volatile spirit was fast escaping from the aperture, and was rapidly filling the apartment with an overpowering and intoxicating exhalation.

Alchymy regarded the vapor with much surprise, but presently he felt himself irresistibly attracted towards the bottle by the seductive odor of the essence that escaped from it. Influenced by some charm, he hesitated at first, but at length his curiosity overcame his judgment, and placing the bottle to his lips, he sipped, and sipped, and sipped; but finding it impossible to come to satisfactory conclusions by such a dribbling process as that, the fatal bottle became glued to his mouth, and he swallowed a copious draught of its contents. And Alchymy knew that he had imbibed a subtle spirit, for there gradually crept over him a drowsiness, his eyes rolled in their sockets, his senses reeled, and the essence of the bottle rushed through every vein and artery of his frame until he fell at last, insensible, upon the floor.

While he was in this condition, a vision of a strange, awful, but indefinite form floated before his eyes—a hideous figure, that seemed to be neither man nor woman, appeared before him. Its face was bloated, haggard, worn into deep furrows and ruts, and distorted by maddening passions; and its withered body was so covered with filth and rags, that its sex was not to be distinguished. It held a drinking cup in its tremulous grasp, which it continually applied with a fierce thirst to its parched, feverish lips; and as it sighed for more drink, its breath poisoned the very sunbeams.

And Alchymy knew that he had liberated an evil spirit; for soon after, in his vision, he saw issuing out of the neck of the bottle other wicked and powerful demons, similar to the one he had swallowed. At first they came forth in small numbers, but they soon swelled into myriads over the earth, like waters from a gushing well.

But what appeared most incomprehensible to Alchymy was, that the footsteps of these hideous hags should be followed by a host of obsequious worshippers, who laid down at their most prized and cherished objects barter for a drink out of their maddening cups. Joyous hearts, happy homes, health, honor, nay, their very souls, were freely offered for a pernicious and deadly poison. Though the fearful demon stood impetuously to every one, in the name of all things pure and beautiful, as the pitiless invader of every human blessing—nay, though it devoured its victims at noonday, and sowed the land broadcast with misery, violence, and crime, yet none of these evils appeared to warn the poor deluded victims of the tremulous sacrifice they were making; for although the very air was laden with sighs and desolation, and squalor sat upon every brow, and covered the sad scenes with the spirit of the demons' presence, yet the worshippers offered themselves up in hecatombs upon the altars of these Evil Spirits.

Everywhere its commissioned agents plied their fatal cup—everywhere they spread abroad the means of intemperate indulgence—all over the land, (so it appeared to Alchymy in his vision)—myriads of demons were systematically and diligently employed, enticing, corrupting, and recruiting the wasted ranks of the staggering, rolling, and fallen devotees, and sustaining with terrible efficiency, the whole baneful system of destruction.

It was astonishing to witness the effect of the fatal cup upon different individuals. In some it blighted all the social affections, and violated the sanctuary of domestic peace in a brief space of time. It appeared to be a bitter foe to all social blessings, for it warred ruthlessly upon home, and all the sacred interests of which home is the centre. Some of the poor, infatuated wretches, indeed, put on an air of boisterous merriment for a time; but it was short-lived, for dilapidation and ruin spread all over them, and they were rapidly pushed toward a career of shame and sin, into graves of infamy. In many the pernicious draught brought on a derangement of all their powers, and wrought them into an unnatural excitement or delirium. Then when their brains were fired and whirling with frenzy, they were ripe for any wild act that fancy, a depraved heart, or the promptings of the Evil One, might suggest. After passing through this state, the course assumed another form; for when the paroxysm of fierce bluster was past, it was usually succeeded by a moody, sullen stupefaction.

But the destroyer never paused for a moment. To one the cup was but an impulse to blood and crime; to another it gave a thirst to indulge in a brutal abuse of his wife and children; to another a capacity for lust, violence, or murder; another it instigated to burglary and theft; in brief, the cup of the Evil Genie was a repository where all the iniquities and vices belonging to our fallen nature might be found. There the incendiary lit his torch, and the assassin strengthened his appetite for blood. In that glass every species of sin, from a simple indiscretion to the utmost depravity and guilt, might be drained to the very dregs.

As in a dream of a moment ages may appear to pass, so it appeared to Alchymy, for in his vision he saw the effects of the cup upon the coarser interests of the people. He saw how the poison wasted their energies, and preyed upon the roots of the public wealth. Whole districts of wholesome grain were withdrawn from the public granaries, and after being submitted to a process with which Alchymy was familiar, a subtle poison was extracted. It was so much bread wasted; but it would have been a blessing if the evil had ended with the loss of millions thus annually thrown away. Alas! the mischief became a most productive investment; the seed was sowed throughout the land, and produced too soon a harvest of innumerable losses.

The cause of the poison might be traced in its operation through the whole social body, as it flowed on, corrupting habits of virtue and thrift, paralyzing industry, and begetting a vicious and vindictive spirit. And the result was shown in the increase of poverty, vagabondage, and crime, and in an imposition of taxes and burdens upon the remaining industry and thrift of the community, which oppressed them grievously to bear, in the erection of hospitals, lunatic asylums, and state prisons. No figures could fairly represent the ruinous influences at work on the vitals of the public prosperity, for Alchymy saw with all the clearness of vision, that it was possible to have worse evils than a heavy taxation, and worse relations to the public good than of pecuniary cost. He saw the annual loss of men—men lost to themselves and to the state—whose worth no millions could represent; for who can compute the value of wrecked talents and virtue, and the sacrifice of character and life? No one, for it presses destructively upon the vital connection which subsists between the priceless virtue of a people and the well-being of the State.

What further scenes of misery and vice would have been revealed unto Alchymy we cannot say, but they would have been many, for the Evil Genie was waging open and cruel war on every human interest. But at this moment he became so alarmed at the fearful aspect of the phantasm greeted by the vapors of the bottle that he struggled violently, and woke out of his trance. As quickly as returning consciousness would permit, he replaced the seal which Prudence had so wisely fixed on the bottle, and then he discovered that the Evil Genie contained therein was Alcohol.—Country Gentleman.

The Divine and the Doctor.

A devout minister was once asked by a sceptic if he followed preaching to save souls; and on replying that he did, the caviller rejoined—

"Did you ever see a soul?"
"No."
"Did you ever hear a soul?"
"No."
"Did you ever smell a soul?"
"No."
"Did you ever feel a soul?"
"Yes, thank God," said the preacher.
"Well," said the cavilling doctor, "there are four out of the five senses against one that there is no soul." So the matter might have stopped; but the preacher, as subtle in understanding as he was pious in heart, turned the tables upon the cavilling doctor, and being informed that he was a doctor of medicine, asked—

"Did you ever see a pain?"
"No," was the reply.
"Did you ever hear a pain?"
"No."
"Did you ever taste a pain?"
"No."
"Did you ever smell a pain?"
"No."
"Did you ever feel a pain?"
"Yes," said the doctor.
"Well, then," rejoined the preacher, "there are, you see, also four senses against one to prove that there is no such thing as pain; and yet, sir, you know that there is such a thing as pain, and I know that there is a soul." The doctor appeared confounded and walked off.

Power of Prayer.

The Bible account of the power of prayer is the best we have, or can have.

Abraham's servant prays—Rebekah appears.

Jacob prays—the angel is conquered; Esau's revenge is changed to fraternal love. Joseph prays—he is delivered from the prison of Egypt.

Moses prays—Analeck is discomfited; Israel triumphs.

Joshua prays—the sun stands still; victory is gained.

Hannah prays—the prophet Samuel is born.

David prays—Aithopel goes out and hangs himself.

Asa prays—Israel gains a glorious victory.

Jehoshaphat prays—God turns away his anger, and smiles.

Elijah prays—the little cloud appears—the rain descends upon the earth.

Elisha prays—the waters of the Jordan are divided; a child is restored to life.

Isaiah prays—one hundred eighty and four thousand Assyrians are dead.

Hezekiah prays—the sun-dial is turned back; his life is prolonged.

Mordecai prays—Haman is hanged; Israel is free.

Nehemiah prays—the king's heart is softened in a minute.

Ezra prays—the walls of Jerusalem begin to rise.

The church prays—the Holy Ghost is poured out.

The church prays again—Peter is delivered by an angel.

Paul and Silas pray—the prison shakes; the door opens, every man's bands are loosed.—American Messenger.

Cholera and its Treatment.

One of the immediate characteristics of the disease in its primitive stages is the tendency to the formation of an acid acid in the stomach; everything swallowed in the shape of food apparently ferments instead of being digested, which irritates the coats of the stomach and intestines, leading to diarrhea. All physicians agree that the disease is most curable in this stage. Indeed, resting and fasting, if nothing else can be done, will go far to arrest it. No stimulents or opiates are safe in this stage, or in any other. Drinking a few drops of the tincture of camphor thrown into a tumbler of cold water, or a little supercarbonate soda may be thrown into a glass of cold drinking water until it has the taste of weak ley, which may be drank, and is good not only to check acidity, but bilious matter on the stomach, should any be present. Pure gum arabic may be dissolved or chewed in the mouth at the same time, or cold flaxseed tea may be used.

It must be recollected that every bowel complaint of dysentery is not cholera. In some cases the moderate action of the bowels is the healthy action of nature to relieve the system. The only danger is, that, if neglected, it may in cholera terminate, in that disease, or in an aggravated form of cholera morbus.

The best diet is rice boiled to a pulp, and then boiled with half its quantity of fresh or sweet milk, when it can be had, forming a sort of porridge; season it with sugar and grated nutmeg. In simple cases, good toast and black tea are not injurious to those accustomed to their use.

Though brandy of pure quality, and in small quantities, may sometimes do good, yet as a general rule all stimulents should be avoided. So much for a man who can go about, with the incipient diarrhea upon him, and when nearly every man he meets will offer him a remedy in the form of a recipe, and see pretended cures placarded at every corner, all of which avoid, as well as the services of quacks, who boast of their unbounded skill.

When a real attack of genuine Asiatic or spasmodic cholera supervenes, attended with vomiting and purging of watery matter, so peculiar to the disease, accompanied with a cold, clammy perspiration, and with great prostration, and a sense of heat and thirst, there is but one remedy, and that is calomel. It is an old remedy, but the mode of exhibiting it is new. It is to be given in a pure state, unimixed with opium or other medicinal ingredients. For adults it is to be prepared with a little brown sugar, in doses of not less than thirty or forty grains, and we have both given and taken it in as much as tea-spoonful doses with perfect success, in the most malignant attacks of cholera.

The calomel thus prepared is emptied on the tongue and washed down with a little cold water. If thrown up by the stomach another dose is to be repeated immediately, and if that is rejected another is to be given. There is but one rule in its administration, and that is to continue its repetition till a dose remains, when the vomiting will cease, and the calomel will by its uncontrolled action unlock the liver and kidneys. Bile will soon reappear in the evacuations, and increased discharges of urine, when re-action commences and the life of the patient is saved. Simple adjuncts may be used, such as a temporary mustard plaster over the stomach, cold or iced mucilaginous drinks, in small quantities; and should costiveness follow, a little oil of senna and manna, or other mild purgatives, may be used. The worst result that possibly can occur is a slight pyramism, or salivation, in one case perhaps in hundreds, which will soon pass off with mild treatment, and without injury. In a violent attack of Asiatic cholera, which often terminates in a few hours, there is no time for experiment with homeopathic nostrums, hydro-pathic applications, quack mixtures, or with small opiated doses of calomel. Life must be saved quickly, and that by a remedy about the certainty and early action of which there can be no mistake.

The writer of this was, at one time, in 1845, attacked in a most violent manner with Asiatic Cholera, when he took about six or seven tea-spoons full of calomel before one remained on his stomach. Reaction then commenced, and he was next day enabled to walk out. The only external remedy used was the temporary application of a mustard plaster over his stomach. The only inconvenience he felt was a slight pyramism, from his susceptibility to the influence of mercury. But this was nothing to dying. He then tried the same treatment in other violent cases with the most uniform and perfect success. In 1846 he experienced another attack of cholera in Liverpool, and again cured himself by similar treatment. He became acquainted with Dr. Jackson, who had enjoyed great experience in the treatment of the disease during a long period in the Hon. East India Company's service. He informed us that the calomel practice, in the form and manner we had described it, formed the most successful practice of any other, and that it is a leading and indispensable remedy in the treatment of malignant cholera, none other being thought of in India.—N. Y. Herald.

Be Kind.

Could we realize how much we can increase our own felicity, and how much real happiness every one can strew in the pathway of life, to all whom we may chance to meet, by exercising true charity, there would be no necessity of urging any one to be kind. Yet it is to be feared, that not only mankind in general, but even a large proportion of professed christians, in this respect often forget the example of their Savior, who was ever kind even to his most bitter enemies. And what could not be accomplished in striving to cultivate in our hearts those feelings which prompted him, even upon the cross, to say, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." Has a son become disobedient, and forgotten the precepts taught him in childhood by maternal lips? let these precepts be kindly repeated, and, if necessary, let him be chastened in love. Has a brother become reckless and wayward? let a sister's kindness lead him to respect her if not himself, and induce him to turn his feet into the path of the just, which alone leadeth to true happiness. Has a sister, once loved and respected by all around, wandered from the path of rectitude, let a kind brother buoy up, as it were, her drooping spirits, and save her from an untimely grave. Who of us have not witnessed an expression of joy which flit across the sad countenance of a child, because of a kind look given, or a kind word spoken? Does not our experience plainly testify that we are most easily influenced to well doing by an expression of kindness? What heart is so hard that it cannot be softened, and directed into the path of virtue by the exercise of kindness and affection? And what countenance is so dejected by grief, that it will not brighten with joy in the presence of him whose kindness is manifested, not only by his ways and actions, but also shines out through the very windows of the soul, and sheds a halo of delight upon all around!

Oh! have we not reason to bless God for our numerous kind and sympathizing friends? Can we ever cease to be thankful to our Heavenly Father—the all-wise disposer of events, for raising up such a host of true friends; and shall we ever forget, or cease to love those whose kindness, devotion and sympathy illumed our pathway amid despondency, sickness, gloom and death? No, never, never!—Dorchester Chronicle.

Reflections.

"MARRIED YESTERDAY." Every day in the journal with the first gleam of the sun is flung within our portals, we read this little sentence—"Married yesterday, So and So." Every day there is a wedding feast in some of the mansions of the earth; a clasping of hands and union of hearts in the dim aisles of some holy temple; a pledging of eternal love and constancy during all the hours that are yet to come down, like spring flowers, upon life's pathway. Each day some new marriage crown is set on, and she that wears it, leaning upon him whose life is the brightest jewel set amidst its leaves, steals away from the "dear old home," and nestles tremblingly in fairy cot where love's hand has trained the honeysuckle over the latticed porch, and placed Eolian lyres in all the casements.

"MARRIED YESTERDAY." There are pearls and gold shining now amid the flowers that fringe Love's pathway, and stars gleaming like great chandeliers in the firmament of hope. There are harps tinkling now, whose melody is sweeter than the sound of evening bells, and joys falling like a shower of anemists upon the hearts that yesterday were wed. Life now is become beautiful; the soul soars upward from the dust, like a dove loosened from its cage; there is melody in every breeze and every place—yea, there are angels in every path, with crownings for those who are pressing onward for song and prayer.

"MARRIED YESTERDAY." It seems now a long distance to the grave—a long road to the final rest. But soon the shadows will come and life lose its summer bloom. Then, as the patter of tiny feet is heard about the grandfather's house, and little bairns cluster about his knee who "married yesterday," mayhap will turn back to the records of the past, weeping silently the while, remembering that their summer is gone, their harvest ended, and that soon, gathering up their sheaves, they must pass beyond the gates of pearl, where there will evermore be but one marriage—that of the Lamb with his chosen people.—Newark Daily Mercury.

Try Again, there is no Remainder.

When we were a lad, just after we had commenced the puzzling study of arithmetic, we one day had occasion to seek the teacher's aid in solving a "question." It was in Division, and either as we would please, we could not get an "answer without a remainder." After "trying" for two long hours we took our slate, marched up to the desk, and handed it to the teacher. He looked at our work, said not a word, wrote something on the slate, and handed it back to us. Vexed and out of patience with his cool indifference we returned to our seat, and after indulging in some very rebellious thoughts against him, we read the writing. It was, "Try again, there is no remainder." The silent but expressive sentence gave us more assurance than if he had spoken it a dozen times. It inspired us with confidence. We did try again, and again, and after repeated exertions we succeeded in obtaining a correct result without a "remainder." We felt proud of that boyish triumph, and when we again laid our slate before the master, we were amply rewarded with an approving smile and encouraging words.

These six words are stamped indelibly upon our memory, and ever afterwards when apparent difficulty stared us in the face in our undertakings they recurred to us. Right there, before us,—with our mind's eye—we can see them on the slate every word, every letter distinctly—and we take fresh courage and "try again." Those words were the talisman to all we have ever accomplished. They are not cherished because of their authorship. The crabbled little school-master that wrote them was the least beloved by us of all our youthful instructors, and yet he wrote six words that are engraved in our hearts.—Commeauville (Pa.) Banner.

Vegetable Instinct.

If a pan of water be placed within six inches of either side of the stem of a young pumpkin or vegetable marrow, it will, in the course of the night, approach it, and will be found in the morning, with one of its leaves floating on the water. This experiment may be continued nightly, until the plant begins to fruit. If a prop be placed within six inches of a young convolvulus, or scarlet runner, it will find it, although the prop may be shifted daily. If, after it has twined some distance up the top, it be unwound, and twined in the opposite direction, it will return to its original position, or die in the attempt, yet notwithstanding, if two of these plants grow near each other, and have no stick around which they twine, one of them will alter the direction of its spiral, and they will twine around each other.

Duhamel placed some kidney beans in a cylinder of earth; after while they commenced to germinate, of course, sending plume upwards to the light, and the root down into the soil. After a few days the cylinder was turned one-fourth round, and again this was repeated, until an entire revolution was completed. The beans were then taken out of the earth, and it was found that both the plume and radical had bent to accommodate themselves to every revolution, and the one in its efforts to ascend perpendicularly, and the other to descend, they had formed a perfect spiral. But although the natural tendency of the roots is downward, if the soil beneath be dry, and any damp substance be above, the roots will ascend to reach it.

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

"BORN TO NO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE."

To Editors and Publishers.

The Editors and Publishers of newspapers in Norfolk and Plymouth Counties are hereby notified that a meeting will be held at Young's Coffee House, Cornhill Square, (rear of Joy's Building,) in Boston, on Monday, the 21st inst., at 11 o'clock A. M. It is to be hoped that every paper will be represented.

NEW STEAMERS. The Bay State Steamboat Company are building a steamboat to run between Fall River and New York, of the largest class. She is to be called the Metropolis. The cylinder, lately cast in New York, is the largest ever made—so large that one hundred persons can stand in it. On its completion a party of thirteen dined within its capacious sides. It has been stated that this boat will be put upon the route in a short time.

The Norwich and Worcester Railroad and Steamboat Company are also building a large and magnificent steamer for the New York and Boston route, via Worcester and Norwich. This new boat, in connection with the splendid steamer Connecticut, which is now upon the route, will make the accommodations afforded by this line unsurpassed. We lately had the pleasure of coming through the Sound on this comfortable boat. The night was one of the most beautiful that we ever had the good fortune to pass upon the Sound. The Connecticut moves as quietly through the water as a sailing craft. Any one who cannot get a sound sleep on this boat must be very nervous. The conductor on this route accompanies the passengers through. The good natured Col. Pratt has been a long time upon the road, and is one of the most popular and efficient of conductors.

E. S. Martin, Esq., Pier No. 18 North River, New York City, the courteous Agent of the line, will cheerfully impart to travelers all necessary information. He is ever ready to do his whole duty, and all speak of him as the agreeable and affable gentleman.

DR. JARED SPARKS. This gentleman is charged by the New York Tribune with having suppressed a sentence in one of the letters of Washington, in his biography of that great man. The suppressed sentence relates to slavery, and contains as it would seem, a confession of his sentiments on that institution, and the unreasonableness of his mind, or rather remorse of conscience for being a slaveholder. Dr. Sparks was charged by Lord Mahon with the offence of changing phrases and suppressing important sentences in the writings of Washington, but it is generally believed that the accused successfully vindicated himself from the charge. Perhaps he will do so in this case. It is to be hoped so, for it would be countrymen to present Washington to his own countrymen and to the world in any other than his true relations and attitude to slavery.

CLAM CHOWDER. We understand that owing to the great demand for chowder, at the Granite Saloon, during the days of the military encampment last week, that the price of clam is considerably advanced. This rise in the clam market, however, will make no difference in the quality or quantity of the chowder which our friend French will have on hand this day.

ICE CREAM. The ice cream of Dr. Marden is becoming very generally liked, if we may judge from the rush that we have seen at his shop of late. "What kind will you have?"

THE WHIG CONVENTION. The Whigs met at the Music Hall, in Boston, on Wednesday last, for the purpose of nominating State Officers and defining their position on the various political questions before the State and country. It was a very large and enthusiastic convention. Hon. Franklin Dexter presided. Hon. Josiah Quincy made a speech, which he thought would be his last public address. It was received with great favor. Hon. Emory Washburn and William C. Plunkett, the present incumbents, were nominated for re-election to the offices of Governor and Lieutenant Governor. The resolutions and speeches were all—on nearly all, one way—anti-slavery. The Convention adjourned in fine spirits, resolved to hold on to their own organization and to maintain their own ascendancy in the government of the State in spite of Know-Nothings, Democrats, Fusionists, Free Soilers. We shall see.

SUNDAY SCHOOL EXCURSION. The annual Pic-Nic of the Universalist Society Sunday School came off on Thursday last, in the well known beautiful grove at Abington, and was an occasion of much enjoyment to the children, teachers, and their friends, who participated in the pleasures of the day. The railroad accommodations provided were ample, there being enough cars to accommodate all. The train left the depot soon after the appointed hour, and with but little delay on the road, was at the grove. The usual pastimes were indulged in—dancing, sailing on the pond, etc. An abundant supply of provisions for the comfort of the inner man were spread upon the tables, and, as usual, great havoc made. During the afternoon appropriate and interesting addresses were delivered by Rev. Mr. Parker of South Weymouth, George Newcomb, Esq. of North Chelsea, and Rev. Mr. Dean, Pastor of the Society.

The company returned about 7 o'clock, highly gratified with the arrangements, under the management of Mr. John Page, Superintendent of the School.

The Weymouth Band accompanied the party, and enlivened the occasion with their excellent music.

COL. BENTON. The defeat of this veteran chief of the Democracy has caused regret throughout the free States among all parties. With the defeat of Benton, the Democracy of Missouri is also defeated. The Congressional delegates of that State, in the next Congress, will be all Whigs with only one exception, and that a Benton Democrat. Amid the many victims of the cruel and insatiable slave power, a more noble and illustrious one has not fallen.

THE SUIT AGAINST OFFICERS. The Norfolk County Journal gives the facts respecting the origin of the action of William H. Ela, against Mayor Smith of Boston, Gen. Edmunds, Marshal Freeman, and Captain Evans of the Boston Artillery, for injuries received on the day of the rendition of Burns, laying his damages at $20,000. The writ is returnable at the next term of the Supreme Court in Norfolk County, and alleges that the plaintiff was brutally beaten and stabbed by the military and others, acting under the directions of the defendants.

The Journal states that Mr. Ela, who is in the employ of Charles Marsh, druggist, was in Boston for the purpose of obtaining some goods for his employer. He attempted to go into State or India street to some wholesale druggists, and having one or more phials and bottles in his possession, he was suspected of having vitriol in them for the purpose of throwing at the military. He was accordingly handled pretty roughly, and considerably injured in the affray, which occurred at the foot of State street.

PRICE OF WHEAT. The New York Tribune copies from Hunt's Merchants' Magazine a table of the price of wheat per bushel, at Albany, (N. Y.) on the 1st of January, for sixty-one years, and upon this table remarks: "You will notice that only five times in all those years wheat has been $2 or upward per bushel, while it has been seventeen times at $1 or under—twice at seventy-five cents. Only once in thirty-seven years, that is, since 1817, to wit, in 1837, has it reached $2. The average price for the whole period is $1.38. For the last thirty years it is $1.25, and we give it as a prophecy, which we think may be relied upon, that that will be the price next January. Those who are interested may as well make a note of that. The crop of wheat is too good, too widely extended, and the demand for export to Europe or California too limited, and flour speculators too hard up to maintain present prices. You may as well mark that, Messrs. Farmers & Wheatbuyers."

CHARGED WITH EXTORTING MONEY. Elbridge G. Niles, a constable of Randolph, has been examined before Justice Noyes of Canton, for illegally receiving money in connection with his official business, and has been held in three hundred dollars for trial. The Boston Herald says that Thomas Daily paid Niles eight dollars for not taking out a warrant against him for trespassing on the Sabbath by having company at his house late Saturday night.

For the Patriot.
"Trial of the Spirit."
BY REV. DR. LUNT.

Having perused the pamphlet bearing the above title, I have come to the conclusion—this being the tenth or twelfth I have examined upon the same subject—that either clergymen, generally, are not the persons to be trusted with such matters, or that spiritualism, like the shield of Minerva, or the sword of Achilles, is that before which all assailants are doomed to fall.

The author is a man of faith; upon his faith he assumes a position, from the assumption that his opinions are correct—the Catholic's Mahometan's, Bhudist's, Quaker's, Shaker's Methodist's, Mormon's privilege—that by which endless difference, perpetuates endless strife. He reasons, assumes, approves, condemns, and pronounces judgment upon other men's experience and opinions, as though his conceit was above the actual knowledge of those who are older and wiser, and this, too, upon a question of fact—upon his mere assumption, although he knows that his opinion and the opinions of all those holding similar opinions, is, and have been, questions upon a point of justice, morality and fact, by those who called, and still call, for argument and proof—Atheists, Deists, Polytheists, Pantheists and Rationalists, embracing Astronomers, Geologists, Chemists, Botanists, Anatomists, Physiologists, Moralists, Metaphysicians, and nearly all the members of every great class that have been taught to distinguish between the real and the imaginary. No better evidence can be had of the unsoundness of his arguments, than that he is incapable of proving by argument, that his arguments are sound—i. e., establishing his premise.

Concerning the matter of this book, it would appear that the text is a good spiritual text; that Simon, the magician, was not a medium; that spiritualists obey St. Paul's injunction; that when they say some spirits are good, they only say what St. Paul and the Reverend gentleman leave us to infer, viz: that if some are bad and not to be trusted, others are good and may be relied upon, and as the moral quality of the medium, by the gentleman's showing, determines the quality of the spirit, if by St. Paul's and the Reverend gentleman's method some are found to be good, mediums cannot be so void of the moral quality as the gentleman, by his method, would make appear.

That they are right in investigating for themselves and in not trusting to the clergy, for St. Paul says prove all things and hold fast that which is good, meaning that every man is in duty bound to act upon the Protestant principle, that is, think for himself.

Spiritualists by Saint Paul's method, having proved that there are good spirits, tell us that the spirits have demonstrated as clearly as the Reverend gentleman ever demonstrated the existence of a trine God; that there is neither fire nor brimstone in hell; that the singing and harp playing in heaven is done principally by those who fancy such amusements; that preaching humility and practicing pride; teaching simplicity and practicing ostentation; inculcating personal sacrifice and living in splendor, forgetting that Christ had not where to lay his head, makes one, on the whole, a very respectable Pharisee. So much for St. Paul's method.

As for the new dispensation, I do not wonder at the gentleman's astonishment, in supposing it necessary. What further benefit does he need? Is he not clothed in broadcloth and fine linen? Does he not fare sumptuously every day—he and his twelve petitioners? May their shadows never be less! Is he not the pastor of a very excellent and respectable congregation? Is he not listened to? Is he not respected? Are not his wants provided for? His dispensation suits him in all particulars. Who can wonder at his astonishment? I think there are very few in his circumstances—reasonable men I mean—that would not be astonished if they were told that something more was necessary.

Who would not wonder, after partaking of as much as nature required, at the simplicity of those who would give us more?

Hence the necessity of a few more fishermen, who know by experience what it is to want, and the necessity of a few good spirits to turn our attention to the world below—the miserable, mourning, suffering, ignorant, debased, brutalized, poverty-stricken, wretched world, the world without hope, writhing in misery, crying only for rest; who bear burdens grievous to be borne, while those who preach, touch them not with their little fingers.

The present system is before us, what it has done, and what, with its present impulse, it cannot do. Comment concerning the gentleman's astonishment at the necessity of a new dispensation, is unnecessary.

You will perceive that the gentleman's real object is to prevent people from attending what are called spiritual meetings; to bring those who are mediums into disrepute, (though many of them are women and children, against whom he dare not utter a word of reproach, except in the smooth clerical strain,) likening them to Simon the Magician, who was accused, and to false prophets, and sorcerers, and necromancers, and this, too, after admitting that spirits do speak through mortals, forgetting St. Paul's injunction, making it appear that those who are mediums set themselves up against God.

From this we see his real object is to combat St. Paul and set up another saint instead.

Whig State Convention.

The Whig Convention met in Boston last Wednesday; it was fully attended, numbering "gloriously to 1776." Gov. Washburn and Lieut. Gov. Plunkett were unanimously nominated for re-election. Strong ground was taken upon the Nebraska fraud, one of the resolutions declaring that they will now insist upon an amendment to the Fugitive Slave Law, including the right of trial by jury, and the habeas corpus; on failing in this, that they will demand its unconditional repeal. One gentleman, Josiah Quincy, Sen., said he rejoiced in the passage of the Nebraska bill, as by it we were released from all compromises and the burdens now so oppressive. Another, Mr. Lord of Salem, very satisfactorily showed the folly of the lovers of free soil, in aiding the Democrats to elect men like Mr. Banks, who, not daring to vote for the Nebraska bill, yet by voting for the suspension of the rules, put the power into the hands of their party, to do that which they had not courage to do themselves, from fear of their constituency.

The Convention was very harmonious and enthusiastic. The delegates from this town were Lewis Bass, Jeffrey R. Brackett, Noah Cummings, Adam Curtis, Horatio N. Glover, Gideon F. Thayer, Daniel Baxter, Josiah Brigham, Israel W. Munroe, Ebenezer A. Shaw.

Corn Oysters.

If people will persist in using green corn, allow me to recommend the following preparation. It is exceedingly palatable, and from its peculiar taste is called corn oysters. Grate up any number of ears of green corn. To each pint of corn thus grated, add one egg beaten up, quarter pound of butter, half pint of flour, one table spoonful of salt, struck measure, and one teaspoonful of pepper. Mix the ingredients well together and then drop it by the table spoonful into hot lard, cook it till it is of a light brown color, and then if you please, you can eat it, provided you like it. WELT.

MUSTER ITEMS. The steamer Lilly Dale, which brought passengers to the wharf at Black's Creek, during the military encampment, was the first steanboat that ever came within two miles of that place. She draws about four feet of water, and is nearly one hundred and fifty feet in length.

The sumptuous fare at the Old Colony Depot in this down, during muster days, was one which we richly enjoyed. Capt. Bogardus, who selected the articles, is a good judge of the very best pieces for roasting purposes, and certainly on this account, we are glad to learn that he is to sojourn with the people of Quincy for some months. Good health to Capt. Bogardus.

John Wright, the prince of caterers, and sutler to the Division, sustained the high reputation he had previously acquired. His equal is hard to be found, and go where you will, the name of John Wright is first mentioned in connection with "good cooking and good eating."

The Old Colony Railroad conveyed to and from the encampment during the three days, 25,000 persons besides all the military. The last train comprised twenty-one cars.

Summary of Intelligence.

ORIGINAL AND SELECTED.

The Japanese gave Com. Perry a grand banquet, in which cooked worms, fried snakes and a variety of similar dainties were comprised. Etiquette obliged justice to be done to the fare.

At the last session of Congress $1,010,500 were appropriated for fortifications, of which $30,000 was for Fort Warren, and $10,000 for Fort Independence, in Boston harbor.

A remarkable fact is officially recorded in a late Paris paper, to the effect that out of upwards of sixteen thousand people, subscribers to the public baths of Paris, Bordeaux and Marseilles, who were in the daily habit of bathing, only two cases of cholera had occurred.

There is a man in prison in England, who has been confined thirty-nine years—for debt.

A horse is now being exhibited in England which is "twenty-one hands high, and weighs twenty-five hundred weight."

The City Councilmen of New York have adopted a report for the erection of a monument in that city to the memory of General Worth, at a cost not exceeding ten thousand dollars, and advertise for plans and estimates.

Commodore John Downes, of the United States Navy, died at his residence in Charleston, on Friday morning last, at the age of 69 years and 7 months. He was a native of Canton, in this State.

EPISCOPAL FAIR. The Ladies connected with the Episcopal Church will hold a Grand Fair at the Tower Hall, (Quincy,) commencing on TUESDAY EVENING, Sept. 5th, and continuing through Wednesday and Thursday, day and evening, for the sale of Fancy Articles, Useful and Ornamental.

Also, Refreshments of all kinds, with Ice Creams, will be had, to supply the wants of the inner man.

As an amusement for the evenings, a number of young Ladies and Gentlemen have volunteered their services for the performance of Tableaux, which will be something new and attractive.

The services of a Band of Music have been engaged for the occasion.

The proceeds of the Fair are to be appropriated for repairs on the church.

Tickets for admission—during the day, 12 1-2 cents; Evening, 25 cents. Season Tickets, 50 cents.

Tickets may be obtained at the Quincy Bookstore, and at the door.

In this town, on the 15th inst., Lucy Ann Frances, daughter of Mr. Jonathan and the late Mrs. Lucy A. Leavitt, aged 11 months.

In Tyngsboro', (Mass.) Aug. 2, Amelia Caroline, daughter of Mr. Benjamin F. and Mrs. Julia A. Sherburne, aged 2 months.

Farwell, dear babe, a long farewell,
On earth we meet no more,
No mother's arms doth her enclose,
Far, far above all earthly woes,
There her again you'll see.

A God of love, and wisdom too,
Redeemed her from the grave,
Encircled with eternal bliss,
Thy beauteous babe, thou fondly press,
For this, His life, He gave.

Poetry.

"Pass on, Relentless World."

Swifter and swifter, day by day,
Down Time's unquiet current hurled,
Thou passest on thy restless way,
Tumultuous and unstable world!
Thou passest on—time hath not seen
Delay upon thy hurried path;
And prayers and tears alike have been
In vain to stay thy course of wrath.

Thou passest on—and with thee go
The love of youth, the care of age;
And smiles and tears, and joy and woe,
Are on thy history's bloody page;
There, every day, like yesterday,
Writes hopes that end in mockery;
But who shall tear the veil away
Before the abyss of things to be?

Thou passest on—and, at thy side,
E'en as a shade, oblivion treads,
And o'er the dreams of human pride,
Thy misty shroud forever spreads;
Where all thine iron hand has traced
Upon that gloomy scroll to-day,
With record ages cease to fade,
Like them should live, like them decay.

Thou passest on—with thee, the vain,
That sports upon the flitting breeze,
Pride framed of dust, and folly's train,
Who court thy love and run thy ways;
But thou and I—and he it is—
Pass onward to eternity;
Yet not together let us go,
To that deep void but shoreless sea.

Thou hast thy friends—I would have mine;
Thou hast thy thoughts—leave me my own;
I kneel not at thy gilded shrine—
I bow not at thy slavish throne,
I'll let them pass without a sigh,
They wake no swelling rapture now,
The fierce delights that fire thine eyes,
The triumph of thy mighty brow.

Pass on, relentless world—I grieve
No more for all that thou hast given;
Pass on, in God's name—only leave
The things thou never yet has given;
A heart at ease—a mind at ease—
Attainments fixed beyond the way—
Courage to meet the ills to come,
And patience through life's little day.

Little Kindnesses.

Not might deeds make up the sum
Of happiness below;
But little acts of kindness,
Which any child may show.
A merry sound to cheer the babe,
And tell a friend is near;
A word of ready sympathy
To dry the childish tear.

A glass of water, timely brought,
An offered easy chair;
A turning of the window blind
That all may feel the air.

An early flower unsold, bestowed,
A light and cautious tread,
A voice to gentle whisper hushed,
To spare the aching head.

Hasty Words.

Fall off a word that lightly leaves the tongue,
Another's least unconscious wrong;
And were the wound but present to the eye,
We'd mourn the pain that solace might defy.

Was it a taunt—perhaps a thoughtless jest?
An idle ripple on the vacant sea?
But thy words may yield a venomous deed,
What need, to speed them, but a little breath.

We toy with hearts, as if the thousand chords,
That vibrate to the touch of hasty words,
Could jar out discords all the live-long day,
Nor any tension cease to give way.

Oh, strike them gently! every human breast
Is by a secret load of grief oppress'd;
Forebear to add a note of timeless woe,
Where discords ever are so prone to flow.

Anecdotes.

"My son, how many species of cats are there?"
"Five."
"I thought, Gussy, there were only two—the domestic and wild cat."
"I tell you there is five. Don't you suppose I know, old lady?"
"I dare say; but a little more respectful, and name them."

"Well, there's wild cats and tame cats."
"But that makes only two."
"Just you wait, old lady, till I get through, won't you? Ain't there cat-fish and cat-a-line and cat-a-vampus?"

"And you may add another species to your list," said the mother of this hopeful; "when your father returns look out for a cat-a-nine tails."

"My daughter," said an anxious father to his bawling offspring, "I intended that you should be married, but I don't intend that you shall throw yourself away on any of the wild ruthless boys of the present age; you must marry a man of sober and mature age; one that can charm you with wisdom and good advice, rather than with personal attraction. What do you think of a fine mature husband of fifty?"

The timid, meek, blue-eyed little girl, looked into his face, and with the slightest possible touch of interest in her voice, answered, "I think two of twenty-five would be better, pa."

A young lady lately asked a gentleman the meaning of the word Surrage.
"It is, miss," replied the gentleman, "a gale through which parties have to pass, on their way to get married."

"Then, I imagine," said the lady, "that it is a corruption of sorrow gale."

"You are right, miss," replied the gentleman, "as woman is an abbreviation of wo to man."

"Look there!" exclaimed a returned Irish soldier to a gaping crowd, as he exhibited with some pride, his tall hat with a bullet-hole in it. "Look at that hole, will you? You see that if it had been a low-crowned hat, I should have been killed outright."

Miscellaneous.

The Man who could not say—No!

One of the most striking instances of a great and virtuous mind struggling heroically with adversity, which ever came under our observation, was exemplified in the conduct of a once wealthy merchant, whose misfortunes are still held in remembrance in the south of England. Mr. Jonathan Travis, to whom we here allude, had realized a competent fortune in trade, and after years of honorable exertion, he retired from the busy scenes of life to a neat and ornamental villa in one of the most pleasing parts of Hampshire. Mr. Travis carried with him to this retreat a character more than ordinarily free from stain. By those who knew him, he was often styled "Honest Jonathan Travis," a designation which followed him to that part of the country where he took up his residence, and where he soon acquired weight and consideration among his neighbors.

Here, at Honiton Hall, in steady observance of all that society required of him, and attention to all that was due to himself, he appeared to glide amid enjoyments that he appreciated with thankfulness; above all, he was blessed with a wife whose every thought concentrated in the endeavor to render his home a scene that communicated gladness to his heart. Two children had quitted their parents' arms for the tomb, which told sad bereavement; and though grief had passed heavily over the feelings of Mr. and Mrs. Travis, their equanimity was restored, and they passed their days in interchanges of kind offices with their friends, and of satisfaction with the world. Jonathan felt a pleasure in rendering services to another, and he was accustomed to say, "that if there exist an individual who has not made another grateful, let him hasten to produce such an effect; for he may be assured of a succession of pleasing associations, heightened by an approving conscience, which the wisest have described as the path of peace." But in the exercise of this benevolence, Mr. Travis, most unfortunately for himself, forgot that there was a possibility of being overreached, and of having to suffer the stings of ingratitude. This he was doomed to feel in the most aggravated manner. He had already, in his course through life, occasionally suffered small losses by the facility of his disposition—by his inability to withstand those who approached him with the view of preying on his good nature. The time at length came, when not warned by those trifling injuries, he was to deliver himself up, bound a willing sacrifice to misallied friendship.

One day a friend, Mr. Edward Crompton, a young gentleman with whom he had been some years acquainted, called upon him to make him a confidant of a circumstance which had occurred, and to beg his assistance. Crompton was the only son of one of the earliest acquaintances of Mr. Travis, now deceased, and had been brought up as a clerk in a respectable banking house. In this situation he had conducted himself with so much exactness, that, on the death of the cashier, he was informed by the partners of the house that he might assume that superior office, provided he, as is usual in such cases, gave security for his intrusions to the extent of £20,000. Delighted as Crompton was with this agreeable prospect held out to him, he felt considerably at a loss with respect to the matter of the security, till he thought himself of applying to the old friend of his father, and one by whom he was also well known, Mr. Jonathan Travis. On making this state of his affairs known to the object of his visit, Mr. Travis for a moment felt stunned with the proposition, but his wonted benevolence of disposition immediately rallied, and he listened with too willing an ear to the demand which was made upon him. Crompton modestly urged the length of time his family had been known to him, his character for steadiness and unimpeachable integrity, his anxiety to rise by honorable exertion in the world, and the dependence that might be placed upon him. The sum he represented as of no consequence, even were it trebled, since he would never hear anything of it; while by such a trifling circumstance as adding his signature to the deed, an everlasting obligation would be conferred.

It is a matter of deep regret, that at this point of the conference Mr. Travis did not at once say in a polite but decided manner, that he could not think of entering into so very serious an engagement. But he was a man who could not say—No! He subscribed the document presented to him, giving it a value that equalled the extent of his fortune. Yet his visitor had no sooner departed, than he began to be alarmed at the step he had just taken. He could not banish his act of imprudence from his mind. The consciousness of having committed himself so deeply, without the concurrence of his wife, and without any security against mischance, intruded on his busy hours, and usurped those which ought to have been devoted to repose; the transaction ever presenting its most fearful consequences to his mind. These consequences were not long in being felt. It appeared that young Crompton was not originally depraved in disposition. His only failing seemed to be a love of gaiety and dress, inconsistent, as one would suppose, with the monotony of his occupations. This failing, however, was hardly developed while he filled an interior situation; it was only when he was promoted that he began to indulge in expensive amusements, and a splendid style of living, altogether unwarranted by the amount of his income or his status in society. As no fault could be found with his conduct professionally, of course the partners of the firm had nothing to say to his mode of living, which they indeed, by a somewhat culpable negligence, scarcely took the pains to inquire into. Things went on in this manner for a period of about eighteen months, when a painful catastrophe occurred. It was discovered that Mr. Edward Crompton had eloped to America, after robbing his employers to a very large amount, more, it was said, than the value of his bond of security. He had foreseen that his peculations to support his extravagance could not be much longer concealed, and he therefore determined on making his escape with as large a sum as he could skillfully manage to secrete. Let us turn from this dreadful picture of depravity to the unfortunate man who was involved in irretrievable ruin by the villainy which had been perpetrated.

Mr. Travis now saw his worst fears realized: the fitful dream of life and its wakeful vicissitudes presented a chaos of sufferings to his irritated mind. It is astonishing how easily a man may ruin himself; no earthquake or other convulsion of nature takes place when the negotiation of utter beggary is accomplished. In this well regulated realm, the law, through the medium of a few mean officials, noiselessly and deliberately strips the victim of all he possesses. One day, he is rolling in wealth, and the world bows down before him; the next, he is penniless, and stands a bare miserable animal, almost craving a mouthful of food for his subsistence. How many unhappy individuals have brought themselves and their families into this deplorable predicament, by not having had the moral courage to say—No!

On the present occasion, the acquaintances of Mr. Travis stood aloof. But what can any one do for another under such circumstances? Society is cemented on the principle, that every one must take care of himself. His friends, we say, stood aloof: the busy world looked on: all could yield commiseration, but none could afford relief; because a man who could be so totally regardless of his property should, as every one acknowledged, take the consequences, be what they may. Jonathan Travis at once bared his bosom to the storm; surrendered all to meet the heavy claims upon him; witnessed valuables pass into the possessions of others by public sale; and, when denuded of all, retreated in poverty from a home he had created by his industry. The effect on the feelings and health of Mrs. Travis was disastrous; no skill in medicine, nor soothing of affection, nor representation of brighter prospects, availed the least. The wound was too deep; a settled despondency usurped her faculties; she listened to all that sincerity could impart, or that affection could suggest; but she could not struggle with despair. She never reproached her husband, even by a look, and in the prime of life sank rapidly into the grave. This was the most wretched period of Mr. Travis's existence; the firmness of his nerve seemed to give way on this greatest of all deprivations, and he tottered on the brink of that eternity to which the partner of his bosom had departed. Yet, heavily as this blow was felt, he rallied; it neither crushed his hope nor shook his rectitude. He looked sternly on the ravages of untoward events. Even in the thought of loneliness through life, he found some consolation in the idea, that Mrs. Travis's tenderness could not endure severities to which her amiability would have been exposed. He looked around him in the midst of desolation, and firm in his integrity, applied his mind to procure means of existence. Dependence on the exertions of others he spurned with indignation. He discovered how little was necessary to sustain life; why should he be miserable? He saw the sun rise gloriously as heretofore, the day pass shining on, bright as usual, and succeeded by an evening tranquil as ever; then why should he be wretched? He shrunk from the gaze of no one—he walked firmly past those who held poverty in abhorrence—in honest occupation he knew there were resources sufficient to enable him to preserve his character from reproach, and with this nobility of sentiment he sought employment.

The calmness which the intrepid Travis displayed under his accumulated misfortunes, was by some persons stigmatized as apathy, or the result of excessive pride. They accused him of vanity in exposing his property to those who courted his society in the day of prosperity, and he was now contemptuously called the Philosopher. Nevertheless, there were others who considered him to exhibit a rare example of fortitude, and a degree of heroism approaching to the sublime; yet such was the general effect of his conduct, that worldly-minded persons with whom he used to transact business, avoided him—those he had been accustomed to oblige, lost all remembrance of him; and by the vulgar mass he was denominated a madman, since no consideration could induce him to forego his dignity of manner, or even apparent cheerful resignation; and they expressed astonishment that he could entertain pity, or speak with tenderness of others, whose misfortunes were trifling compared with his own.

Baffled in the attempt to procure employment such as his previous course of life in some measure capacitated him to undertake, and finding on all sides that the aged veteran had little chance of an engagement when his competitors are the youthful aspirants of fortune, he addressed himself to the Next Best, without any depression of his wonted spirit, or allowing himself to sink in his own esteem. For some time he toiled as a laborer at a building erecting in an adjoining county. In this humble occupation he enjoyed his frugal fare with thankfulness. He had no lingering desire for what was now beyond his reach, nor any thought mingled with regret, save for one loss which he could not teach his bosom to forget. He welcomed the sun that taught him when to rise, and hailed the peaceful eve that hushed him to repose. He experienced that there were joys in life, whatever station a man may fill, and felt the full value of content. This course of humble toil he pursued with satisfaction to his employer, till by some neglect in the construction of a scaffold, it gave way, and by the fall poor Travis's hip joint was dislocated, which incapacitated him for further exertion. One would think that this crushed warrior would never more have looked upon the world with complacency. But the mind of the maimed and crippled Travis soared into the higher in consequence of this distressing calamity. He was recommended to retire to the alms-house, there to end his days in peace. He, however, declared that he could not think of stooping to live on public charity so long as he was able to move about, even although compelled to use a crutch to assist his steps.

We have now to describe the means which he adopted to glean a scanty subsistence. After recovering, and becoming able to leave his bed, he directed his attention to the cutting and selling of flints. From the choicest lumps of flint—a material he had no difficulty in procuring from the chalky cliffs of that part of the country in which he moved—he hewed those pieces best suited to the gun and the tinder-box. With these slung in a basket over his arm, he hobbled over the district, often finding customers among those who recognized him, and who looked on him with mingled sentiments of awe and compassion. Nothing, we have been assured, but kindness, could move the rock of integrity on which his heart was placed. Firm as the flint he chipped, he could bear adversity unmoved; but if the touch of compassion approached him, he was instantly subdued—his big heart swelled, and the warm tear rolled down his weather-beaten cheek. For some years he continued to follow the humble but honest occupation we have mentioned; his misfortunes and his heroism in adversity becoming more and more the theme of comment the longer that he traversed the country.

Were this relation a fiction, care would be taken to record the capture of Crompton in a distant country, and his abandonment of at least a portion of that spoil of which he had inhumanly robbed his too facile victim, with the subsequent restoration of Travis to a state of prosperity and comfort. But this is not a fiction: it is the recital of a simple and melancholy truth; and however painful to our feelings, we have to relate in conclusion, that Crompton, being beyond the reach of British law, was never captured, but was, on the contrary, left in perfect enjoyment of his ill gotten gains, and, unless lately gone to his account, still lives in affluence in one of the North American states. As for poor Travis—the once wealthy and honored Travis—he continued till the day of his death to wander with his little basket of flints over the counties of Sussex, Hants, and Dorset, whose inhabitants have, till the present hour, a lively recollection of his appearance and character.

Worn out in bodily frame, though unimpaired in moral energy, he at length sank beneath the horizon of mortal existence. Early one morning in the latter end of autumn, when the chill of approaching winter had already tinted the leaves of the forest with yellow and russet brown, a band of reapers going forth to their daily labor, lighted upon the remains of the wayworn Travis. His once portly but now shrunken form lay in the sleep of death, beneath one of the stalks of the harvest field. On one side lay his basket of flints; on the other, the crutch with which he used to support his weakened frame; the body was already stiffened by the cold humidity of the atmosphere; and the thin grisly locks, which protruded from below their decayed covering, were dripping with the clear dew of the night. Everything betokened that the soul had for some hours taken its flight. The aged head of the deceased reclined upon an outstretched arm, leaving his countenance exposed, and exhibiting in its lineaments the serenity of a being at peace with itself, and with the world which it had left.

The Beard.

The American Phenological Journal has the following very suggestive remarks upon the use of the uses of the beard and the hair. They are worthy of serious consideration:—

"If amputating the beard were merely a harmless, fashionable whim, we would not notice it. But as watchmen,—self-appointed perhaps—upon the walls of health of body and vigor of mind, it becomes us to sound public and general alarm respecting whatever impairs either, especially the latter. This we conceive shaving and frequent hair-cutting do, and for the following reasons:

First—Electricity is the grand motive instrumentality of all forms of life and of mind. If abundant, the life-power is abundant. If diminished, all those functions and powers—mental included, it carries forward, are weakened. This fundamental truth here assumed, every principle of physiology and psychology either proves or confirms. On or by means of it, mainly, water-treatment, galvanism and electricity effect their cures.

Secondly—Hair is one of the very best conductors of electricity that exists. This, all electrical experiments conclusively prove. The head requires more electricity than any other part, because the organ of the mind. To collect this stimulant of mind from the atmosphere, and transmit it to the brain, the head is surrounded by hair, and the face by beard. Amputating them prevents the coming in of as much air, or gathering up of as much electricity as by being left long and flowing. Long beard and hair, then, promote mental power and brilliancy. Hearty, then, we say, let them be worn.

Does not even the Bible give a like evidence, by ascribing the strength of its strongest giant to uncut hair and beard; and to their amputation, his becoming weak "like other men?"

Besides, what proof can be more conclusive than that a most intimate inter-relation exists between the beard and the manly element itself? The masculinity of every man corresponds with, measures, and attests the amount of this virility. To men, then, it becomes both a sign and promoter of masculine power and beauty. Its amputation then must be attended with both injury and deformity.

But we are persuaded that men shave and barber mainly to please women. Yet only sickly feminine taste—or rather want of taste—will require it.

Women, too, especially those whose hair can be trained to curl gracefully, will wear their hair in flowing ringlets, rather than to tie it up closely, for they will thereby collect and furnish a larger amount of that electricity which alone can impart that glow of health called soul—that buoyant, happy, hilarious ecstasy which forms a chief attraction of women, and that sprightliness and clearness of mind so desirable to every human being."

The too Hasty Reproof.

"Neighbor," said I, to one of my friends who lives near me, "you have sadly splashed your stockings! In the state in which the roads now are, a little care, it is very plain, you have not exercised. If you were a little more careful, your appearance would not be a whit less respectable."

My neighbor civilly thanked me for my very excellent advice, and then added that, as I had so narrowly scrutinized his stockings, it would do me no harm to take a glance at my own. This I immediately did, and found, to my confusion, that if he had been in the mud, I had as surely been in the mire. How it happened I cannot tell, but certain it is that I was by no means in a fit state to call him to account in the manner I had done. However, this advantage attended the affair. I resolved another time to give a sharp look out for my own imperfections, before I ventured to rebuke those of another.

"O wad some power the giftie gie us To see ourselves as others see us! It wad frae monie a blunder free us, And foolish notion."

If it were only half as easy to amend ourselves as to reprove others, and if giving advice we could secure the benefit we are so intent to confer on our neighbors, how often would Old Humphrey be spared the mortifying reflection that he was scattering abroad what was wanted at home! While in the very act of recommending more care in a servant who had upset a salt cellar, he knocked a drinking glass from the table with his elbow and broke it in pieces.—Old Humphrey.

What shall we Eat?

If meat were furnished as cheap as water, it would be esteemed too severe a task to eat it, during such hot weather. But when it costs so enormously, and has no special merit of wholesomeness to commend it, we certainly should be excused from its use. Still, if one has the money to spare for it, we will not object to its answering very well to keep the body in respectable condition. Beef, more than any other meat,—providing it is from a healthy animal, and is not too tough,—is wholesome. But then it is not needed by most people in Summer. On the other hand, the meat eater must sleep longer than the one who lets it alone. We doubt not that men who eat no meat get as much good out of six hours' sleep as they who eat it do out of seven. If so, here is a double waste—of money for the article, and of time to get over its effects.

But there is a class of alarmists who cry out against vegetables whenever an epidemic threatens to approach. They are strong enough in some cities to have secured the prohibition of the sale of vegetables in the markets and groceries, while the cholera prevailed. Their intentions were good, of course; but we shall not believe that ripe, fresh vegetables will prove injurious to mortals any more during an epidemic than at other times. Of course, unripe fruit, wilted and decaying vegetables, or unseasonable ones, will not be consumed with impunity,—but we speak to sensible folks.

Potatoes that are potatoes—we mean potatoes that are not made up simply of a squishy pulp, with half their weight in water, surrounded with a dirty peel; but such as we occasionally find in market under the name of Pink Eyes, or the Bermudas, which are plenty now, and the Mercers, which are always so, are good enough for the best conservative in town. Turnips are good, though there is not much nourishment in them. Cabbages, spinach, and "greens," of all sorts, are good only for those who never have found them indigestible. They should be eaten only under protest.

Rice is excellent, in milk or with sugar. Do not hinder the children from using the sugar freely. It fattens the chattels of the south, and will fatten them. Never believe that their teeth decay in consequence. Milk is excellent. It satisfies the appetite, is light, wholesome, and cheap. Boiling the milk improves its flavor, ripens it, and makes it easy of digestion even for the sick. Simple puddings, fruit puddings, and pies, if not too rich, are economical and good. Then fruit in its season is worthy of thanksgiving. Strawberries are so plenty that they can better be afforded than meats, and they are as wholesome, as refreshing, too. Bananas now abound. Those which are perfectly ripe and not at all decayed, are safe. Pine apples furnish the palate with a perpetual illusion. You lay hold of one, and its delicious flavor promises great pleasure to the palate, but it seems to fail of meeting the demand exactly, and though you stuff with the woody, fibrous body of the apple till your judgment forbids any more, you still experience a craving for it. They are not worth what they cost to common folks.

Flour is the staple, after all. In bread and biscuits, cakes and puddings, the good housewife can manage to give flour a relishing and wholesome form, though varied daily. Moreover it is about as cheap as anything we eat, in spite of the high market prices. Corn as Indian, corn as hominy, or corn as samp, is a national dish. Patriotism, economy, health, and a Yankee education all combine to recommend it in all its forms, excepting perhaps that very delectable combination of it with beans, which men in honor of the aborigines still designate succotash. Given in a desert, corn enough and the usual facilities for preparing it for the table, and no man has a right to ask for annals or quails. Cucumbers and their kind are very dubious; never should one eat freely of them, and if they ever have played a person a trick, he will do well to avoid them utterly. It is a gratuity that their very pleasant flavor could not be extracted and communicated to some such harmless medium as mush, rice, or Indian meal. If the Crystal Palace does well in its legitimate and promised work of stimulating human industry in all directions, perhaps it may be yet. We shall not patent the suggestion. Eggs fortunately fetch prices that can be afforded. They are very nutritious and very digestible, unless cooked to the consistency of bullets. We suspect that egg-fed men make the best thinkers, meat-eaters the best fighters, and strict vegetarians the whitest and most delicate members of society. Physiologists say that the human brain hungers always for phosphorus, and that when it is plentifully supplied, thinking comes easy. Now phosphorus is plentiful in eggs, whence it seems to be a legitimate deduction that our suspicion is the truth.

Fish are for the edification of men in hot weather; but they must be fresh fish—as recently as possible from the water. Look sharp before buying them on Mondays, and on Saturdays, too; they are apt to be the unsold remnants. Some citizens make free with salt fish at this season. It is a grave objection to them, however, that they provoke thirst which must be quenched with immoderate draughts of cold water.—N. York Times.

A Laconic Sermon.

"The first shall be last, and the last shall be first."

Hirelings seldom preach from this text, probably because it would be preaching against themselves, therefore it becomes us outsiders to stir up the pure minds of some of them if they have any, by way of remembrance.

This text was uttered in reference to the high-professing publicans, who were nearer the kingdom, but it is applicable to the same characters in all ages—will apply as well to the people of this age as to those in the days of Christ.

In all ages since such a thing as religion has been professed, there has been a first and last class. Among the Jews the teachers were the first in their own estimation, more holy, wise, and good, than the common people, and the Jewish nation as a nation, thought themselves far before the despised Gentiles; but when the trial came, the first became last and the last first. The Jews of high profession, though looking for Christ, rejected and crucified him, while the publicans and sinners, who had not the promise of his coming, had wisdom to discern his works and what manner of spirit he was of, and received him gladly.

So it is with individuals at the present day. We have known some professedly good men, and rich in this world's goods—men always talking to "sinners" about their fearful condition, who are far behind the infirm old man in thread-bare coat, or the poor old woman in faded bonnet, who shrink into some back pew, and hardly dare raise their eyes to heaven and cry "O Lord, be merciful to me, a sinner."

Travel where you will, if you are cold, naked, hungry, thirsty, or weary, and need a favor in the name of Christ, you will be sure to receive it, and that too, with a hearty good will at the humble cabin of the publican, than at the doors of such men! The one will welcome you to his bed and board, while the other, in a majority of cases, will threaten you with the work-house or the house of correction, if you are not immediately off.—Valatie (N. Y.) Times.

The Value of Advertising.

Advertisers will do well to ponder the following sensible remarks, contained in a cheap little book, entitled "How to get money."

"Whatever your occupation or calling may be, if it needs support from the public, advertise it thoroughly and efficiently, in some shape or other that will arrest public attention. I freely confess, that what success I have had in my life, may be attributed more to the public press than to nearly all other causes combined. There may possibly be occupations that do not require advertising; but I cannot well conceive what they are. Men in business will sometimes tell you they interested therein, that they may appear and be heard concerning the same, at a Court of Probate to be holden at Roxbury, in said County, on the twenty-sixth day of August, A.D. 1854, at two o'clock P. M., by publishing this Order three weeks successively in the newspaper called the Quincy Patriot, printed at Quincy.

W. S. LELAND, Judge of Probate.
August 12.

Commonwealth of Massachusetts.
NORFOLK ss. At a meeting of the County Commissioners, held at Dedham, within and for said County, on the third day of August, in the year eighteen hundred and fifty-four, by adjournment of the June term next preceding.

UPON the Petition of APPLETON HOWE
and others, Inhabitants of the Towns of Weymouth and Hingham, representing that the public convenience and safety require that a Road and Highway should be laid out and constructed, beginning at a point on Oak Street, in the Town of Weymouth, near the house of Allen Vining, and leading in a westerly direction through lands said Vining, Thomas Croker and Robert Richards to Pine Street, thence on the same course through lands of Loring Pratt, Warren Bates, Robert Richards, Jacob Holbrook's land, Martin Vining, Eliza Bates and Ezra Reed, to Pleasant Street,
near the house of said Reed.
Also—That public convenience requires the widening of Columbia Street, in said Weymouth, and also locate and construct said Roads and Highways according to the laws in such cases made and provided, (notice having been first given to all persons and corporations interested.)
We, the County Commissioners for said County, did, on the eighth day of March, A.D. 1854, at the dwelling-house of Allen Vining, in Weymouth, and said County, the time and place before designated,
and at the same place on the sixteenth day of May,
A.D. 1854, sit in time and place to which an adjournment in such cases was had, proceeded to view said premises and route and street, and hear the parties, and the Town of Weymouth was then and there duly represented by its agents, committee or officers, and having completed said view and hearing, and heard all the parties who then and there desired to be heard, the said Commissioners make return of their proceedings so far as relates to the widening of Columbia Street, as follows:—they adjudge that common convenience and necessity require that said Columbia Street be altered and widened, and that the prayer of said Petition so far as relates to said Columbia Street should be granted, and of and concerning the other matters enveloped in said Petition, no further adjudication at this time is had.

Witness our hands, this third day of August,
A.D. 1854.
NATHANIEL P. SAFFORD,
JAMES C. DOANE,
NATHAN JONES,
County Commissioners.

Commonwealth of Massachusetts.
NORFOLK ss. At a meeting of the County Commissioners, held at Dedham, within and for said County, on the third day of August, A.D. 1854, by adjournment of the June term next preceding.
ON the Adjournment aforesaid: Ordered—That the County Commissioners will meet at the dwelling-house of Appleton Howe, in Weymouth, in said County, on FRIDAY, the twenty-fifth day of October next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, at which time and place said Commissioners will proceed to view the premises, and alter and straighten and widen and new locate said Columbia Street, and take such order in relation to said Adjudication as by law they may be authorized to do. And that an attested copy of said Adjudication, with this Order thereon, be served upon the Clerk of the Town of Weymouth, thirty days at least before the time pointed for said view, and also that a file copy be published three weeks successively in the Quincy Patriot, a newspaper printed in Quincy, the last publication to be fourteen days at least before said view, and that like copies be posted up in two or more public places in said Weymouth, fourteen days
at least before said view, that all persons and corporations interested therein may then and there appear and be heard if they see fit.
EZRA W. SAMPSON, Clerk.
A true copy of the original Adjudication on file and Order thereon.
Attest, EZRA W. SAMPSON, Clerk.

Poetry.

The True and Constant Heart.

Oh, keep your houses and your lands,
Though poor I crave them not;
I only ask for one true heart
To share my humble lot.
Oh, what is wealth and what are lands
In sickness and distress?
Be sure a true and loving heart
Will bring more happiness.

Give me a true and constant heart,
To share my weal and woe,
Content to follow in my steps
Wherever I may go.
A heart from whose deep, inmost cell
Fond pity's tear will start,
When men's ingratitude shall make
My bosom pain and smart.

Away with wealth, away with lands,
But little joy they bring;
And often, like a serpent, when
Will charm us but to sting.
An honest heart, if true it be,
Is worth a world of gold,
And brings to its possessor joys
Unthought of and untold.

I would not sell the kindly word
That from a true heart springs,
For all the pomp that clusters round
The greatest of earth's kings.
Men still may strive for wealth and lands
Like shadows they depart;
I seek to win more lasting bliss,
A true and constant heart.

Oh, struggle on for wealth and fame,
You'll find them bubbles all;
But a true heart is still the same
In cottage or in hall;
Misfortune cannot alter it,
Gold cannot buy its truth,
And 'tis the same in gray old age
As 'tis in sunny youth.

I sing the true and loving heart
That beats in woman's breast,
Of all that man can win on earth
The brightest and the best.
In sickness and in pain it gives
What wealth and fame cannot;
And it will ease the fiercest pang,
And light the darkest lot.

Autumn Verses.

BY BARRY CORNWALL.

The Summer past, what dreams are over!
The incense of the air hath fled;
The carpeas of the golden mead-
Are torn by tempests, shrill by shreds:
The rose hath lost her fragrance;
The lily hangs her head—
Dead—dead!

Sounds are in the earth and ether,
Sobs and murmurs man's pain power;
Blasts beyond Man's half divine
Rock the branches of the pine;
One sweet thought bloometh
Through the stormy time—
That thy heart is mine,
And mine—thine!

Shout, ye Winds and Thunder!
Pour your floods of gloom!
All must end in sunshine!
That is still your doom!
When the maiden May and April,
In their verdant loom,
Weave bud and bloom.

So, through wild November,
And December's snow,
I will dream of beauty,
Till the violets blow;
And, should pain beset me,
In this world below,
Thou art near, I know,
I know—I know!

Anecdotes.

An Irish boy who was trying hard to get a place, denied that he was Irish.
"I don't know what you mean by not being an Irishman," said the gentleman who was about hiring him, "but this I know, you were born in Ireland."
"Och, your honor, if that's all," said the boy, "I'll come to that. Suppose your old cat should have kittens in the oven, would they be loaves of bread?"
The boy got the place.

Not long since, an Eastern man, while on his way to Boston, was stopped on the highway by a robber, and requested to hand over his money, or have his business blown out.
"Oh," said the traveller, quietly, "blow away, blow away! it's better to go to Boston without brains than without money."

A good deacon, making an official visit to a dying neighbor, who was a very unpopular man, put the usual question—
"Are you willing to go, my friend?"
"Oh yes," said the sick man.
"I am glad of that," said the deacon, "for all the neighbors are willing."

"Oh, Mary dear, my heart is breaking."
"Is it, indeed, Mr. Closest? so much the better for you."

"Why so, my idol?"
"Because, when it's broken out-and-out, you may sell off the pieces for gun-flints."

"Tommy, my son, run to the store and get me some sugar."
"Excuse me, ma, I am somewhat indisposed this morning. Send father, and tell him to bring me a plug of tobacco."

"I say, John, where did you get that loaf-er's hat?"
"Please your honor," said John, "it's an old one of yours, that Missis gave me when you were to town."

A young lady remarked to a male friend that she feared she would make a poor sailor. The gentleman promptly answered, "Probably—but I'm sure you would make an excellent mate."

"Is your house a warm one?" asked a man in search of a tenement.
"It ought to be," the painter gave it two coats, recently," was the reply.

Miscellaneous.

The following communication was written some years since, but may not be wholly uninteresting at the present time. As a reminiscence of the triumph of American skill, and as a sketch of one of the loveliest islands on the globe, we commend to the attention of our readers:—

The Yacht America and the Isle of Wight.

MR. EDITOR.—As the late race between the American schooner "America" and the vessels belonging to the Royal Yacht Club of England has given rise to much conversation and the result to much pride on our part, I thought that a short and perhaps disconnected sketch of the Isle of Wight, where the Regatta took place, and of the Club, might not be uninteresting to some of your readers. The course was round the Isle of Wight, and the starting place was Cowes, on the Island. It is some years since I was there, but its beautiful location and its agreeable and picturesque appearance remain deeply impressed upon my memory—and although much of the charm is dispelled on entering its principal street, which is both narrow and crooked, yet its delightful environs revive those pleasing anticipations, which its approach by sea was calculated to excite. Cowes is situated at the mouth of the River Medina and is twelve miles distant, across the Solent, from Southampton. It is divided into East and West Cowes; so called from their respective positions upon the river. On the Eastern side is a stately castle surrounded with rich and beautiful lawns and trees—formerly, if not now, the residence of the Earl of Shannon. On the western side is a conspicuous castle, and also the Royal Yacht Club House, where the members of the Club hold their meetings. It has apparatus for the display of signals to enable gentlemen to communicate with their respective vessels in the roadstead. The Club was established in the year 1812, and has enrolled amongst its members the names of the most distinguished of the nobility and gentry of England.

The yachts were stationed off the Club House, from whence they took their departure, and the distance around the island, which a vessel would be likely to make, could not fall much short of a hundred miles, and if it be true that at the Needles (which are at the western extremity of the island and about twenty miles from Cowes), the America had left the nearest yacht eight miles astern, it is apparent that the Yankee boat was either a "very good 'un to go," or that the English clippers were no clippers at all. The distance which the America had run being about eighty miles, making a gain of one mile in ten over the fastest of the contesting boats. The America is a schooner of 170 tons, and is under the command and owned by Mr. J. C. Stevens of New York. The hull of the America is very low, with great breadth of beam, and draws it is said, eleven feet of water aft, while only six forward. She has no foremast, and depends upon her fore and mastsail—which, with her jib and gaff-top-sail on her main, constitute, with the aid of a good breeze her means of locomotion. Seventeen English vessels entered for the race, ranging in tonnage from two hundred and eighteen tons to forty-seven tons—and one three-masted schooner of three hundred and ninety-two tons, which even in the commencement of the sailing, does not appear to be anywhere—and a correspondent of the London Times says—"Within the first minute, the immense superiority of the America became visible." She began at once to glide up with the fleet and then to pass one yacht after another, till she took the fourth place—the Volante, Arrow and Beatrice being ahead—and all that could be said of them was, that they were delaying her from taking the lead a little longer than the others."

It will be noticed, by referring to the map of the Isle of Wight, that the vessels engaged in the contest went from Cowes to the eastward, and having sailed round the island returned through the Solent from the west to the starting point. Osborn House, the seaside residence of Queen Victoria and Prince Albert, is on the easterly side of the river Medina, and the America, when visited by the Royal Family, was moored opposite this extensive mansion. It was formerly owned by Fitzroy Blackford, Esq., but for the few past years, it has been devoted to the purposes above-named. The scenery around this garden of England is exceedingly beautiful and picturesque. Pursuing the course of the America, we leave the mouth of the Medina and proceeding eastward, pass round Old Castle Point, and the next object that attracts our attention is the celebrated Norris Castle, built by the late Lord Henry Seymour, after the Antique style. We next perceive the Osborn House, above alluded to—the "King's Key," at the entrance of Wotton river. Then the ruins of Quarr Abbey, once a famous monastic establishment, founded in the reign of Henry I., by Baldwin, Earl of Dover. Its destruction commenced in the time of Henry VIII., and but little save the "ivy-mantled tower" and the fragments of arches and doorways, remain to tell the story of its former greatness. Binsted Parsonage, Ryde House, and several beautiful villas next appear. Opposite Ryde is Spithead, where the Royal George was sunk, with the Commander Kensington and about eight hundred men, in 1782. Nettles Point and the Priory are passed before we come to Brading Haven, which at high tide is a beautiful sheet of water covering about nine hundred acres. The perilous reef called the Beambridge Ledge, and the Culver cliffs, of chalky whiteness, next appear, and then we arrive at the celebrated Shanklin Chine. The word Chine as used in the description of several places on the Isle of Wight, means a chasm on a high ridge of land, abruptly cleft down. Then follows the bold eminence of Dunpore and the romantic valley of Boschurch, where rocks and cliffs and grassy lawns, an expanded sea and winding rivulets, with wild flower dells and rich parterres are all mingled and adjusted with the elegance of taste and the apparent carelessness of Nature. All the delightful beauties of the Undercliff are now fully in view, but passing by St. Catharines towering heights, we leave many a lovely scene, and the gloomy features of the Black-gang Chine are now visible before us. Savage sublimity is the characteristic of this wild ravine. We now pass the bays of Chale and Brixton, and having arrived at Freshwater Bay, the majestic altitude of the line of cliffs extending before us excite our especial wonder.

The Needles (rocks) to which we next arrive, are five in number, and are of great size and altitude, but bear little resemblance to the implement whence their name is taken. The original needle, which was one hundred and twenty feet high, was undermined by the waves and fell in 1764.

All these points have undoubtedly been insulated from the main land by the fury of the waves.

Moving onwards we pass through the beautiful bays of Totland and Colwell, leaving Hurst Castle on the left, and the lovely village of Norton on the right, and come again into the Solent, where there is nothing remarkable to attract the attention, save only the quiet lawns and diversified scenery of Hampshire County on the English coast, and the retired hamlets, woody glens and verdant dunes that continually are opening upon us, as we make the circuit of England's garden isle.

For the Patriot. Political.

Owing to the dissatisfaction which is felt by a portion of the Whig party at the anti-slavery resolutions passed at the late Whig Convention in Boston, quite a number of the influential men of that party have seceded, and refuse to support the nominations. They are forming an alliance with the old line Democrats, and will run candidates of their own selection and their own views. Otis P. Lord, Esq. of Salem, will be run for Governor, and Patrick Riley, Esq. for Lieutenant Governor. Mr. Riley was lately a United States Deputy Marshal, and his nomination with that of Mr. Lord, will concentrate upon the ticket the Hunker Whig, Hunker Democrat, Union Saving and Compromise parties. It is understood that the anti-Maine law liquor party will render it very efficient aid. The substitution of the name of Mr. Dunbar, a young gentleman of much promise, for that of Mr. Riley, has been suggested, but though distinguished for the efficient aid which he gave to Marshal Freeman in the rendition of Burns, yet it is thought best that a gentleman should be selected of more mature years. The nominations, whatever they may be, will be anti-administration and anti-totalism to the back bone, and will doubtless receive a large vote. Arrangements will be made, by which the ticket will receive the votes of our foreign population.

For the Patriot. The Know-Nothings.

This mysterious order are creating some sensation at this time among politicians of every kind. All calculations of the results of election, and therefore all calculations respecting one's chance of getting an office, are futile. While politicians are trembling lest an earthquake may suddenly swallow them up, the Know-Nothings are full of glee and confidence, and boast they will take the reins of government into their own hands and then they will—what? Nobody knows.

There is a lodge in this town, as well as in nearly every town and city of the State. The lodge in this town is very large, constituting a majority of the voters, so it is said. They meet in the hall over Mr. Wyman Abercrombie's store. At present the members of the lodge in Quincy are more numerous than they will be, when lodges shall have been formed in the neighboring towns, to which many members of the Quincy lodge belong. The members formerly belonged to the three parties in the following proportions: four-ninths Free-soilers, three-ninths Whigs, and two-ninths Democrats of various denominations.

This Know-Nothing movement has apparently thrown the slavery question one side, and also the Maine liquor law question. Thus emotion after emotion passes over the public mind. Next year there will be a new one.

Men are very much alike after all. Even the members of the Know-Nothing league are men we verily believe, with the usual proportions of good and evil in their compositions. They will have to be judged by their acts, and we will not venture to anticipate the public judgment on acts yet to be committed by a party that has not yet got into power.

For the Patriot. Modern Spiritualism.

MR. EDITOR.—The publication of Rev. Dr. Lunt's sermon makes it proper that some notice should be taken of it, inasmuch as he has given expression to some views of spiritualism and those interested in it, which a more practical knowledge of the subject would, most probably, have induced him to have discarded.

There are extravagant and enthusiastic persons in all sects and parties, yet they do not, or ought not, to stamp their peculiar characteristics on the classes to which they profess to belong; they are not the rule but the exception, and when the latter is taken as the basis of an argument, as is often done, it is evidence only of the weakness of the point to which it is applied; those who believe in spiritual manifestations can no more be justly charged with Pantheism and other modes of infidelity or atheism, than Unitarians can be reproached with the deism of Parker, or those opposed to slavery be accused of embracing the sceptical views of Garrison and Foster.

What is the belief of modern Spiritualists, as they are termed, and are they sustained in the faith they have adopted by the evidence adduced to support it?

Modern Spiritualists—we use the term in its common acceptance, believe that man is of a two-fold nature, that there is "a natural body and a spiritual body" combined in one person, that the corporeal body is united to an active principle capable of existing in a form not usually visible to mortal organs, that this corporeal body is moved and controlled by this living principle or spiritual body within it, that death is the dissolution of the ties that unite and hold together those bodies here, and that when the earthly body dies, the spirit man lives on, and whatever higher sphere of action he may attain to, he can still exist in an invisible form his earthly home and communicate with those who have not yet passed through the gate of immortality. Such, we believe, is the substance of their faith—the spiritual nature of man will not be denied by those who possess a Christian faith, and the only point of difference with them seems to be, whether our deceased friends who have gone to the "spirit land" can communicate by visible means with those left behind them here.

In support of their faith certain phenomena are presented by spiritualists, which they believe can be accounted for on no other principle than that of spiritual agency. Take for example the movements of a table placed in a room where there are persons desirous of inquiring into the reality of this, to them, new theory; by request the table indicates answers to certain questions, such as the number of years that have elapsed since the occurrence of a particular event; it is requested to move in one direction, it does so; it is then requested to move in another, and it does so also; now granting there is no collusion, what do these facts prove? It is a primary law in mechanical science, that matter, vis inertia cannot produce motion, and here matter is moved without the aid of any visible agent. The inference must then be, that as matter of itself cannot originate or produce motion; there must be an invisible power that moves the table, and when that power on the request of those present, moves it in such direction as they point out and desire, it is evident such power must possess intelligence as well as ability, and these two qualities combined, constitute a being that has a personal existence, and when that power or being, by such means as are at its disposal, communicates such answers as a particular deceased friend only could have given, to questions proposed to it, the conclusion is inevitable that it is the spirit of that friend that answers the questions so proposed. Is not such a conclusion logical, the fair deductions of reason from established facts? How then can unbiased minds resist them, and find reason in the materialism of Rogers, or the buffoonery of Madison?

It is said, and it is an assertion only, that such phenomena are not in accordance with proper religious views; the reverse of this may think is true, for if we may so speak, spiritualism is in conformity with the philosophy of the Scriptures; it rejects no part of them; confirms and illustrates many parts not sufficiently regarded by most people;—take for example the denunciations, that stumbling block with theologians, and the spiritual theory conforms to the letter of scriptural record, while the speculations of divines perplex and embarrass the understanding. Unitarians, or many of them, believe the possessed were mere lunatics, and that Jesus did no more than cure them of disease, but how he caused the lunacy to enter into the swine they have not explained, and indeed they appear to have raised a greater difficulty than they have attempted to remove, for that the swine should become crazy seems to suppose they had some sense and reason to be destroyed, a higher grade of intellect than has usually been assigned to them. Now, on the theory that good and bad spirits exist around and about us, it is reconcilable with reason, that the denunciations of scripture were such as is there represented, and that divine agency could expel them from one body and cause them to enter into that of another animal.

If "mediums" can write communications from eminent deceased men, in a hand writing which is a fact simile of the writing of such deceased person, and in a style above the ability of the "medium" in his normal state to compose, which has been done, we can by analogy comprehend the modus by which the scriptures were written, and have a stronger faith in their inspiration, because a fact within our own knowledge analogous to it naturally gives additional weight to testimony resting upon revelation alone.

The writing on the wall of Belshazzar's palace was done by a visible hand; that hand must have belonged to a disembodied spirit, or an angel commissioned for that purpose; angels, we know from scripture have form, and why should not a "disembodied spirit"? That the "just made perfect" rise to the dignity of angels, we have a remarkable proof, for John in the Apocalypse tells us that when he was about to worship the angel, he said to him "see thou do it not, for I am thy fellow servant and of thy brethren the prophets," and we are told by a greater authority that in the resurrection we are "like unto angels." The definition of angel is a messenger, and why may not departed spirits be messengers to communicate with the world they left.

That spirits revisit the earth is also in accordance with scripture. At the transfiguration of Jesus, Peter saw Moses and Elias talking with him. Will any of christian faith say that this was an illusion or vision of the imagination? Surely not. If, then, Peter saw them, it is clear they visited the earth long after their spirits had been separated from their earthly bodies. Is it unreasonable to believe that other spirits do the same? Such has always been in some form a popular belief. How often are they appealed to by public declaimers, even in the pulpit as well as in the forum.

The "mediums" have been compared in the sermon we have alluded to, to the "weird sisters," and it is said they are ugly. What beauty is, is not always easy to decide; it is a quality about which mankind differ; in our day the man whose face bears the nearest resemblance to the baboon has arrived at an elevation in the fashionable world, in point of beauty, we suppose, not easily approached by the multitude; and he whose projecting chin bears the proud appendage of a horse's tail, has reached a point of admiration few can attain. When the traveller Clapperton was in Africa, the ebony belles of that region called to view this new visitor of their country; they admired his manly form and graceful port, and as they left him they said to one another, with a sigh, "what a pity it is that he is white."

To the devout mind the scriptures are a fountain which can supply all its wants; but there is another class who, like Thomas, have faith only in what they see and handle; they live on indifferent to that future life which is before them; their ideas of immortality do not surpass what was held by many heathens before the advent of Christianity. If there are "disembodied spirits" around and about us, which the author of this sermon seems to believe, is it unreasonable or unscriptural to suppose that they should communicate with us in some manner to confirm one of the greatest truths of revelation? We have seen that it is not.

The Sovereigns of Europe.

Nicholas, Emperor of Russia, is fifty-nine years old, six feet one inch high, erect and soldier-like in form, and, when young, was decidedly handsome. He is intelligent, shrewd, stern, resolute, and by no means wanting in personal courage. He is a good disciplinarian, but not a skillful commander in war, as was proved in his younger days. His information in regard to the condition and policy of all nations is minute and extensive, his plans vast, his ambition boundless. In the last respect he truly represents the Russian character and sentiment. The same disposition prevails in Russia now to pour down on the more fair and wealthy and sunny realms of the south and west of Europe, as in the days when the Roman Emperor was overwhelmed.

Frederick William, King of Prussia, is the brother-in-law of the Czar, but a very different kind of a man. He is about fifty years of age, despot in feelings, but somewhat liberal by compulsion. He would gladly join the Emperor of Russia in his plans if he dared; but his people are otherwise inclined. He is fat, "a good looking," tolerably "good natured," and somewhat stupid sort of a man. Should the present war continue for some years, he will probably be found on the side of Russia. His present declaration of neutrality is merely designed to gain time to watch the course of events for one campaign, and then shape his course according to results.

Francis Joseph, Emperor of Austria, is twenty-three years of age, and has succeeded in raising small monstrosities for his handsome face, and a small loan for his exhausted treasury. He has a high, broad forehead, a good form, about five feet ten inches in height, and is an expert and an excellent horseman. He exhibits no signs of extraordinary administrative capacity, and will probably add little to the reputation of the House of Hapsburg. He fell in love with a young lady last fall, "at first sight," and was recently married to her. His government is almost bankrupt in pecuniary resources; his people are discontented, and his empire is exposed to desperate peril between the contending interests and nations now at war on the continent of Europe. He is greatly indebted to the Emperor of Russia, and would join him in the partition of Turkey, but for the dread of the vengeance of the Western powers; and the opposition of his own people. His position is perilous, turn which way he will; and neutrality is almost impossible.

Abdul Medjid, Sultan of Turkey, is but thirty-three years of age, although he has one daughter married, and two more betrothed. He is rather small in stature, with a swarthy, sad, and mild expression of countenance. He is in favor of reforms in his empire; is just and merciful in his rule, and delights more in superintending his schools and public improvements than in marshaling his armies and navies for battle; but forced into war for the existence of his empire, as he is, he will doubtless maintain the ancient reputation of his gallant and warlike race. Thus far, in the difficulties with the Czar, he has shown a moral courage, a firmness and moderation, and an energy in preparing for war, that have enlisted on his side the sympathies of nearly all civilized nations. He has no wife. Sultans do not marry. He is evidently a sincere and zealous Mahomedan, though he has stipulated with the Western powers that he will place the Greek and Christian population of his empire on the same footing as to civil rights as the Turks.

Louis Napoleon, Emperor of France, is rather below the middle stature; has a dull and drowsy eye, and a countenance that ordinarily expresses but little. He is about forty-four years of age, and has had an adventurous life. From an artillery officer in disguise to a rowdy in New York, a special police officer in London, and prisoner at Ham, he is now seated on the most dazzling throne of Europe, and wields a power second only to that of the Emperor of Russia. Public opinion has undergone a great change in regard to his mental capacity since he ascended the throne of France. He has manifested an ability of high order as a ruler and statesman; and at this moment, exercises a greater influence over the affairs of Europe than any other sovereign, not even excepting the Emperor of Russia. And this influence has wielded wisely for his own interest, and thus far for the honor and interest of France. He enters on the conflict with his great antagonist of Russia with a dauntless spirit and an energy of perpetration that show much of the true metal of his uncle "of glorious memory."

Queen Victoria, of England, rules over the most populous, wealthy and powerful empire on the globe. On her dominions the sun never sets; and under her government the people of England and Scotland, at least, enjoy more freedom than under any monarchy. Queen Victoria is now thirty-five years of age; of a mild and amiable disposition, and is an exemplary wife and mother. But as a ruler she exercises little authority. Her Cabinet Councilors and Parliament are the actual rulers of the British empire. The naval power of England is nearly as great as that of all other nations combined; and her commerce and manufactures greater than those of any other nation.

Oscar, King of Sweden, is now in the prime of life, and personally, is strongly inclined to side with the Czar in the present war. But his people almost unanimously are hostile towards Russia. An armed neutrality is his declared position, and to this position and its rights the Czar accedes.

The King of Denmark is under personal obligations to the Emperor of Russia, but is compelled by his position and the voice of his people, to adopt the policy of neutrality.

Christina, Queen of Spain, is fully occupied just now, with the insurrectionary movements of her own people, who are disgusted with her open profligacy, her disregard of the welfare of her subjects, and the arbitrary principles of her government. She is young yet, but her reign will probably be short.

The King of Sardinia would be a liberal, if backed by any power that would enable him to contend with the myrmidons of Austria.

Otho, King of Greece, is a mere cypher, a tool in the hands of England and France.

Such are the principal sovereigns of Europe, at the commencement of a general war that is likely to prove one of the most sanguinary and momentous conflicts that has ever occurred on that continent, and that cannot fail to result, in the end, in many changes in its condition. What those changes may be, time only can reveal; but there is little doubt that despotism will suffer more than the cause of freedom. The people will gain what the despots lose.

Wm. Wirt—Incident in History.

The distinguished William Wirt, within six or seven months after his first marriage, became addicted to intemperance, the effect of which operated strongly on the mind and health of his wife, and in a few months more she was numbered with the dead. Her death led him to leave the country where he resided, and he moved to Richmond, (Va.) where he soon rose to distinction. But his habits hung about him, and occasionally he was found with jolly, frolicsome spirits of bacchanalian revelry. His true friends expostulated with him to convince him of the injury he was doing to himself. But he still persisted. His practice began to fail off, and many looked on him, as on the sure road to ruin. He was advised to get married with a view of correcting his habits. This he consented to do if the right person offered. He accordingly paid his addresses to Miss Gamble. After some months attention, he asked her hand in marriage. She replied:—

"Mr. Wirt, I have been well aware of your intentions some time back, and should have given you to understand that your visits and attentions were not acceptable, had I not reciprocated the affection which you evinced towards me. But I cannot yield my assent until you make me a pledge never to taste, touch, or handle any intoxicating drinks."

The reply to Wirt was as unexpected as it was novel. His reply was, that he regarded that proposition as a bar to all further consideration of the subject, and he left her. Her course towards him was the same as ever—his resentment and neglect.

In the course of a few weeks, he went again and solicited her hand. But her reply was that her mind was made up. He became indignant, and regarded the terms she proposed as insulting to his honor, and vowed it should be the last meeting they should ever have. He took to drinking worse and worse, and seemed to run headlong to ruin.

AN Instrument purporting to be the last Will of THOMAS COLSON, late of Brain-tree, in said County, Widow, deceased, having been presented for Probate, by EDWARD POT-TER, the Executor therein named.Ordered—That the said Edward notify all persons interested therein that they may appear and be heard concerning the same at a Court of Probate to be held at Roxbury, in said County, on the ninth day of September, A. D. 1854, by publishing this Order three weeks successively in the newspaper called the Quincy Patriot, printed at Quincy.

W. S. LELAND, Judge of Probate.

Aug. 26.

To the Honorable Judge of the Court of Probate for the County of Norfolk.THE Petition of JOSIAH RICHARDS, Administrator of the Goods and Estate of

THOMAS COLSON,

late of Weymouth, in said County, Boat Manufacturer, deceased, respectfully represents, that the said deceased had at the time of his death, Real Estate, consisting of three and three quarters acres of Land situate in Weymouth, with a house and barn thereon, subject to a mortgage to secure $187.50 and interest. Also one half an acre of Land in said Weymouth, with a shop thereon, subject to a mortgage of $75 and interest, of the value of $50, and that the lawful claims against the Estate of said deceased for just debts, including funeral expenses, amount to $538.07, and that the charges of administration are $50, making the whole claims $588.07, and that the value of his personal estate is $292.41, being insufficient by the sum of $345.66 to satisfy said claims—and that the persons interested in the estate of said deceased as heirs, or otherwise, are Lydia S. Colson, widow of said Thomas, and Frederick Colson and Anne Colson, minor children of said Thomas, all of said Weymouth, and the several creditors whose claims have been allowed by the Commissioners of Insolventcy. The said Administrator therefore prays that he may be licensed and empowered to sell and convey so much of the Real Estate of the said deceased as will produce said sum of $345.66.

NORFOLK ss. At a meeting of the County Commissioners for said County, held at Dedham, within and for said County, on the third day of August, in the year eighteen hundred and fifty-four, by adjournment of the June term next preceding:—

UPON the Petition of APPLETON HOWE
and others, Inhabitants of the Towns of Weymouth and Hingham, representing that the public convenience and wants require that a Road and Highway should be laid out and constructed, beginning at a point on "A" Street, in the Town of Weymouth, near the house of Allen Vining, and leading in a westerly direction through lands of said Vining, Thomas Croker and Robert Richards, thence on the same course through the lands of Loring Pratt, Warren Bates, Robert Richards, Jacob Holbrook's heirs, Martin Vining, Elijah Bates and Ezra Reed, to Pleasant Street,
near the house of said Reed.

Also—That public convenience requires the widening of Columbian Street, in said Weymouth, and requesting the Commissioners to view the premises and locate and construct said Roads and Highways according to the laws in such cases made and provided, notice having been first given to all persons and corporations interested:—

We, the County Commissioners for said County, did, on the eighth day of March, A. D. 1854, at the dwelling house of Allen Vining, in Weymouth, in said County, the time and place before designated,
and at the same place on the sixteenth day of May,
A. D. 1854, the time and place to which an adjustment in said case was had, proceed to view the premises and roads and streets, and hear the parties, and the Town of Weymouth was then and there duly represented by its agents, committees or officers, and having completed said view and hearing, and heard all the parties who then and there desired to be heard, the said Commissioners make return of their proceedings so far as relates to the widening of Columbian Street, as follows:—they adjudge that common convenience and necessity require that said Columbian Street be altered and widened, and that the prayer of said Petition so far as relates to said Columbian Street should be granted, and that the Commissioners be and they are empowered in said Petition, no further adjudication
at this time is had.

by adjournment of the June term next preceding:—

ON the Adjournment of the Court:—Ordered—That the County Commissioners meet at the dwelling house of Appleton Howe, in Weymouth, in said County, on FRIDAY, the twenty-seventh day of October next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, at which time and place said Commissioners will proceed to view the premises, and alter and straighten and widen and new locate said Columbian Street, and take such order in relation to said Adjudacation as by law they may be authorized to do. And that an attested copy of said Adjudaication, with this Order thereon, be served upon the Clerk of the Town of Weymouth, thirty days at least before the time appointed for said view, and also that a like copy be published three weeks successively in the Quincy Patriot, a newspaper printed in Quincy, the last publication to be four days at least before said view, and that like copies be posted up in two or more public places in said Weymouth, fourteen days
at least before said view, that all persons and corporations interested therein may then and there appear and be heard if they see fit.

Quincy,

Poetry.

The Laborer and the Warrior.

The camp has had its day of song,
The sword, the bayonet, the plume,
Have crowded out of rhyme too long
The plow, the anvil, and the loom!
O, not upon our tented fields
Are freedom's heroes bred alone;
The training of the workshop yields
More heroes true than war has known.

Who drives the bolt, who shapes the steel,
May with a heart as valiant smite
As he who sees a foe's red steel
In blood and fire, and blows of might;
The skill that conquers space and time,
That graces life, that lightens toil,
May spring from courage more sublime,
Than that which makes a realm its spoil.

Let labor then look up and see
His craft no pith of honor lacks:
The soldier's role yet shall be Less honored than the woodman's axe:
Let art his own appointment prize,
Nor deem that gold or outward light
Can compensate the worth that lies
In tasks that breed their own delight.

And may the time draw nearer still,
When man this sacred truth shall heed,
That from the thought and from the will Must all that raises man proceed:
Though pride may hold our calling low,
For us shall duty make it good;
And we from truth to truth shall go,
Till life and death are understood.

Thyself.

"Even as a flower?
No, fairest, be not to me as a flower.
The uncertain sun calls forth its odorous breath,
The sweetest perfumes give the speediest death,
The sport and victim of a summer hour
Fairest, be not a flower.

"Even as a star?
No, brightest, be not to me as a star.
'Tis one of millions, and the hurrying cloud
Of wings the glittering splendor in its shroud;
Murmurs pale its lustre, and it shines afar
Brightest, be not a star.

"Even as a dove?
No, purest, be not to me as a dove.
The spoiler of breaks in upon its nest,
Robbing the downy joys of its soft nest,
And plunging silence through its silent grove.
Purest, be not a dove.

"Even as a rock?
No, my most faithful, be not as a rock.
It mocks the embracing wave, or stands alone
In loveless gloom, in dreary wastes unknown,
Senseless alike to fortune's smile or frown.
Changeless, be not a rock.

Even as—myself?
My soul's best self, but as myself;
Brighter than star, fairer than flower,
Purer than dove, and in thy spirit's power,
Steadier than rock!
Yes, be thyself, thyself—only thyself.

Echoes.

Still the angel stars are shining,
Still the rippling waters flow,
But the angel-voice is silent
That I heard here long ago.
Hark! the echoes murmur low,
Lung ago!

Still the wood is dim and lonely,
Still the sparkling fountains piny,
But the past and all its beauty,
Whither has it fled away?
Hark! the mournful echoes say,
Fled away!

Still the bird of night complaineth,
(Now indeed her song is pain)
Visions of my happy hours,
Do I call and call in vain?
Hark! the echoes cry again,
All in vain!

Cease, oh echoes, mournful echoes!
Once I loved your voices well;
Now my heart is sick and weary,
Days of old, a long farewell!
Hark! the echoes sad and dreary,
Cry, Farewell, farewell!

Anecdotes.

A sailor once had a high dispute with his wife, who wished him to the devil.
"Plague on me, Peg," said he, "if I don't think I should fare pretty well with the old fellow, as I married into his family."

In talking over travels, Tom asked Joe "if he was ever in Greece?"
"No," said Joe, "but I fell into a thunder-bug tub of soap, once."

A Deputy Sheriff was speaking of taking a man, but observed he had much rather have a lady.
"What! take a lady to jail?" remarked one of the company.
"Oh no, not to jail," said he.
"But, a lady quickly rejoined, 'you would have been glad to have taken one to court.'"

"Dad, if I was to see a duck on the wing, and was to shoot it, would you lick me?"
"Oh, no, my son; it would show you are a good marksman, and I would feel proud of you."

"Well, then, dad, I plumped our old drake as he was flying over the fence this morning, and it would have done you good to see him come down."

A housemaid who was sent to call a gentleman to dinner, found him engaged in using a tooth brush.

"Well, is he coming?" said the lady of the house as the servant returned.

"Yes, ma'am, directly," was the reply, "he's just sharpening his teeth."

"Sambo, what you think 'bout the world cum to an end dis year?"
"Dar, go way nigger; yer knows nuffin' tall 'bout de subject. How can 'dis world have an end, when it be round?"

"What are you writing such a big hand for, Pat?"
"Why you see that my grandmother is deaf, and I'm writing a loud letter to her."

Miscellaneous.

Family vs. Company.

CHAPTER I.

"It's all folly, wife!" exclaimed Mr. Jonathan Some, a matter of fact, plain spoken sort of a man, to his better half. "There you have got no less than four kinds of cake, three kinds of pies, two kinds of preserves, to say nothing of knick-knacks and gim-cracks."

The fact was that Mrs. Some was having the minister, his wife and two grown up daughters to take tea with her. She had been engaged for three days in the preparations, and such a display of nice things was calculated to astonish the minister and his family—to give them a two-fold surprise, first, at the variety and extent of her culinary resources, and secondly, at her folly in attempting to make a display beyond her means.

The Someones were in comfortable circumstances. Mr. Some was a farmer, and probably his income might have amounted to two hundred dollars per year.

Mrs. Some was a prudent, careful housewife, who wasted no more of her culinary skill upon her own family than was absolutely necessary. But she delighted in making a grand appearance when she had company. Mr. Some and the boys were sometimes so ill-natured as to growl at her careful catering, when the house contained no company; and it cost them to the bone to see such extraordinary preparations for the neighbors. It was "kiss the cook" when they were alone, but the board groaned with plenty when there were guests present.

Mr. Jonathan Some had just come from the room where the table, with its tempting array of viands, was spread. He did not like it a bit, and after passing the time of day with the parson and his family, he proceeded to the kitchen where his wife was just taking the biscuit out of the oven.

"What do you mean by folly, I should like to know?" replied Mrs. Jonathan Some, somewhat tartly.

She was a second wife, and having been redeemed from one of the advanced stages of maidenhood, her temper had grown a little sour before she became a wife.

"The folly of setting such a table as you have," replied the husband. "I should think you were going to have the President or the royal family to take tea with you."

"I am going to have the Rev. Mr. Meekie and his family, and I will take care of my business if you will of yours," replied the lady, slamming the door.

"Perhaps it is not my business."

"No! I am sure it is not."

"Who pays for all them gew-gaws and gim-cracks?"

"You do, of course."

"But it is none of my business!"

"No! I never thought you were so confounded mean!" said the lady, her face reddening with anger.

"Mean! I'm not mean! But when you get victuals for your own family, you think almost anything is good enough for them. We never see any pies and cakes and knick-knacks."

"Do you think I'm going to make pies and cakes for the men folks to eat every day?" retorted the indignant house-keeper.

"Then don't do it for company. What is good enough for me is as good as I can afford to give my visitors."

"I really believe if you have your own way, you would have me as good as the Smiths."

"The Smiths are as good folks and as liberal as any in town; and I'll warrant Parson Meekie thinks a heap more of them than he does of you with all your kinds of cake."

"You're a fool, Mr. Some!"

"I am fool enough to know that folks are not judged by the quantity of sweet cake they put upon the table when they have company. I repeat it; there are no better people in town than the Smiths."

"I s'pose not; but they had nothing but cold biscuit and molasses gingerbread when we took tea there."

"That's as good as they can afford; but it is no better than they have every day, and I admire their independence."

"They're contemptible mean folks, there!"

"Why? Because they do not attempt to make folks believe they live better than they do? For my part, I don't think it is any better than hypocrisy to make such a parade of victuals as you do, especially when it is hard work for me and the boys to get a decent meal of victuals."

"Did any body ever hear the like," groaned the lady, who had by this time arrived at the pitch of excitement when tears are more effective than words.

"Perhaps they never did; but if I see anything of this sort again, it will be pretty likely to hear of it," replied Mr. Some, throwing off his blue frock and commencing his preparations for taking tea with the minister.

CHAPTER II.

The plate of hot biscuit was placed in the midst of the profusion of fancy eatables with which the tables were crowded. The minister and his family were duly seated and the ceremony was proceeding decently and in order.

Mrs. Some had not wholly recovered from the excitement of the interview in the kitchen, and her hand trembled slightly as she handed Mrs. Meekie her tea. Mr. Some had donned his best blue coat with brass buttons, which had done duty as a Sunday garment for fifteen years.

He seemed to be somewhat uneasy, and though he and the minister had always been on the best terms, his answers were too short and crusty for a courteous host.

"Won't you pass the biscuit to Mrs. Meekie, husband?" said Mrs. Some, with her sweetest smile, albeit not very sweet at that.

Mr. Some did pass the biscuit to Mrs. Meekie, and she took one; and when he passed them to Mr. Meekie, he smilingly declined.

"No, I thank you, Mr. Some; I never eat hot bread. It does not agree with me," said he.

Mrs. Some passed the cold bread, thinking all the time how very uncivil it was in the parson to refuse the hot biscuit she had taken so much pains to prepare.

But Mr. Meekie was very respectful to his stomach; for he found when insulted and imposed upon, that it was tyrannical and disagreeable; and he paid more deference to his digestive organs than he did to the feelings of his vain parishioners.

"My biscuits are not very nice; I did not have as good luck as I generally do," suggested Mrs. Some, as Mrs. Meekie took a second cake.

"Better," interposed Mr. Some. The lady looked at him with very evident marks of displeasure.

"They are very nice," said the parson's wife.

"Take a little more of this quince preserve, Miss Meekie. I dare say it is not so nice as your mother makes; but the truth is—"

"It has stood too long," interrupted Mr. Some. "The jar has not been opened since you were here last fall."

Mrs. Some looked daggers; but the parson very considerably asking Mr. Some if he was done planting, just at that moment, her anger evaporated without any unpleasant effects.

"Husband, won't you pass the cake to Mr. Meekie?"

"Thank you, Mrs. Some, I never eat cake; unless it be something very simple, such as gingerbread or molasses cake."

What a calamity! Four kinds of cake, and the parson wouldn't touch one of them!

"But you will take some of these jumbles; I made them on purpose for you."

"That's a fact, Mr. Meekie," added Mr. Some, maliciously.

He would further have added that his wife never made pies and cake for her own family, but he was afraid of frightening the parson.

"You must excuse me; I doubt not they are very nice, but I have to be careful."

Mrs. Meekie and her two grown up daughters were more courteous, and each nibbled a small bit of the rich pound cake; but they seemed to do it against their better judgment.

The truth was they felt embarrassed by the extraordinary display Mrs. Some had made. They did not feel at home. The whole affair was too set and artificial to be enjoyed, and at an early hour the whole party withdrew, mentally determined to make it a long time before they took tea with Mrs. Some again.

CHAPTER III.

"Wife, where is the piece of meat I sent home for dinner?" asked farmer Some, as he and the boys came in for their noon day meal, on the day following the tea party.

The farmer glanced inquiringly at the table which was spread before him. Involuntarily his nasal organ contracted longitidinally; it would not be polite to say "he turned up his nose," though such was the fact beyond the possibility of a denial.

Farmer Some was not in any sense an epicure. He liked a plain, substantial diet, that "which was good, and enough of it," as he forcibly expressed his ideas of table economy.

Least the reader should suppose he was one of those gouty, ill-natured "feeders," who would grumble at the ambrosia and nectar of the gods, we deem it necessary to particularize the articles on the board of the lady who had placed four kinds of cake before company.

Certainly there was variety enough to satisfy the most fickle taste. On a broken platter—the best dishes were religiously reserved to the use of company—was the half of one sausage and two thirds of another, making one sausage and one sixth all told. They were in suspicious looking fat, and altogether, the aspect of the dish was singularly forbidding.

On a white plate, with a long black fracture, extending quite across it, lay in an aggregated mass, three dozen baked beans, and an infinitesimal fragment of pork rind. This was an antiquity. Farmer Some and the boys had a distinct remembrance of having seen this dish on the table every day during the previous fortnight; proving that Mrs. Some was not only the most economical, but one of the most obstinate dames in the world. The farmer and his boys had virtually said they would not eat these same beans; and Mrs. Some had virtually said they should.

On a worn out blue plate, superannuated, and "rucked" in a thousand places, were four pork bones, looking as though they had been picked by that army of mice which Whittington's cat destroyed. These bones had seen service for the last twelve days. The joints of which they were the disintegrated members, had graced the table just one fortnight before.

There were sundry articles, antique, old fashioned "tit bits," which might have been set before Noah and his friends in the ark. Six long red potatoes, unpeeled, even unsprouted, completed the array of edibles, ornamental and substantial.

The farmer's nose contracted as before related.

"Where is the meat I sent home?"

"Hanging in the well."

"Hadin't we better eat it?"

"I want it for company next Sunday."

"The — ahem! Company again!"

"I expect my brother will dine with us then, and I want something fit to set before him."

Mr. Some looked sulky.

"And you mean to starve me and the boys in the mean time?"

"I should like to know if there is not enough for you?" said the dame, pointing to the table.

Farmer Some turned up his nose.

"Did I ever refuse to buy victuals when you wanted them?" he said, rather sternly.

"Not that I know of, but I didn't suppose you wanted to buy fresh meat every day," returned the wife, sourly. "I am sure I try to be as economical as I can."

"Four kinds of cake which nobody would touch, I suppose is prudent, ain't it?"

"Ah, good morning, Mr. Some, I am glad to see you at home," said Mr. Meekie, walking into the room unannounced.

Good gracious! the minister! and with such a table spread for the family! What a commentary on four kinds of cake for company!

Mr. Some was all confusion. Though the parson intended to look at the farmer, he could see that more than once his eyes wandered over the table.

"Glad to see you, parson; sit down and take some dinner with us," said Mr. Some, taking the minister by the hand.

"Thank you, I don't care if I do," replied Mr. Meekie. "I have a long walk to take before I return home."

Farmer Some was pointing him to a chair, when the lady interposed.

"We have got a picked-up dinner to-day. Husband sent home a joint of veal, but it didn't get here until eleven o'clock, so I had no time to cook it."

"Got here by eight o'clock," said the farmer; "no fibs to the parson."

"But if you will wait only a few moments, I will fry some of the veal."

"Sit down, parson; it's every day fare, but what is good enough for me is good enough for my guests."

"Right, Mr. Some," replied the minister, drawing up his chair. "My business relates to the new bell for the meeting-house. I am carrying round a subscription paper."

"I am with you, parson."

Farmer Some was in a most malicious good humor, and with a broad grin on his honest phiz, he opened the paper the minister gave him.

"Twenty dollars!" exclaimed Mrs. Some. "I should not think they could afford it."

"He gives his friends nothing but gingerbread," said the farmer. "Put me down thirty; we have four kinds of cake."

The parson consumed one "long red," and one of the vulgar fractions of cold sausage. He preferred brown bread to white, and would not touch any of the pies which the prudent house keeper set before him.

Mrs. Some was awfully mortified. Her reputation was sacrificed, and farmer Some never had occasion to find fault with her for making a vain show of three kinds of pies, two kinds of preserves, and four kinds of cake.

The Amazons of Africa.

"In Dahomy, a considerable portion of the national troops consists of armed and disciplined females. They are known as being royal women, strictly and watchfully kept from any communication with men and seem to have been trained through discipline and the force of co-operation, to the accomplishment of enterprises from which the tumultuous warriors of a native army would shrink.

A late English author (Doncan) says, "I have seen them, all well armed, and generally fine, strong, healthy women, and doubtless capable of enduring great fatigue. They seem to use the long Danish musket with as much ease as one of our grenadiers does his firelock, but not of course with the same quickness, as they are not trained to any particular exercise; but, on receiving the word, make an attack like a pack of hounds, with great swiftness. Of course, they would be useless against disciplined troops, if at all approaching to the same numbers. Still, their appearance is more military than the generosity of the men, and if undertaking a campaign, I should prefer the female to the male soldiers of this country."

The same author thus describes a field review of these Amazons, which he witnessed. "I was conducted to a large space of broken ground where fourteen days had been occupied in erecting three immense prickly piles of green bough. These three clumps of piles, of a sort of strong briar or thorn, armed with the most dangerous prickles, were placed in line, occupying about four hundred yards, leaving only a narrow passage between them, sufficient merely to distinguish each clump appointed to each regiment. These piles were about seventy feet wide and eight feet high. Upon examining them, I could not persuade myself that any human being, without boots or shoes, would under any circumstances, attempt to pass over so dangerous a collection of the most efficiently armed plants I had ever seen."

The Amazons wear a blue striped cotton surtut, manufactured by the natives, and a pair of trousers falling below the knee. The cartridge box is girdled around the loins.

The drums and trumpets soon announced the approach of three or four thousand Amazons. The Dahomey soldiers (female) made their appearance at about two hundred yards from or in front of, the first pile, where they halted with shouldered arms. In a few seconds the word for attack was given, and a rush was made toward the pile beyond conception, and in less than one minute the whole body had passed over this immense pile, and taken the supposed town. Each of the other piles were passed with the same rapidity, at intervals, of twenty minutes. When a person is killed in battle, the skin is taken from the head, and kept as a trophy of valor. I counted seven hundred scalps pass in this manner. The captain of each corps, (female) in passing, again presented themselves before his Majesty, and received the King's approval of their conduct."—Capt. A. A. Foote.

Like the Angels.

"Why! you would have me like the angels," exclaimed a young girl with whom a friend had been talking.

Truly would we have woman like the angels. And why not? Is it any harm to be like an angel? We read that they are very beautiful—full of love, truth, purity, compassion, sinless. Are these forbidding traits? Angels slander not each other. They have no circles in their glorious home where characters are picked to pieces. Angels never wreath the face with smiles when envy is gnawing the very heart-strings in twain. Angels never rejoice over the downfall of another. Angels lure not with the eye, and then coldly cast off with the lip. Angels suffer not passion to paint the brow dark with discontent and hatred.

Would you not wish, eventually, to become angels? Or does this thought never enter with the multitude that cross the mind's threshold? Why not prepare, then, for this sublime thoughts, and beautiful, in good deeds? Cultivate your affections, be pure in thought, gentle in spirit. Banish forever deception, evil speaking, inordinate love of pleasure! Why not become, as near as you may be, angels on earth? Ah! young ladies, believe us when we tell you there is no harm in striving to be like the angels.

wine owes its body to the presence of logwood, while a large percentage of the champagne in market finds its birth a short distance back of Newark. Adulteration seems to be the order of the day. Nearly all the old cider vinegar is little less than oil of vitriol diluted with burnt sugar, and a small quantity of the real article added to give it the proper odor. Even in Stilton cheese, for which the best price is asked, calcareous molecules of carbonate of lime have been detected.

Cream of tartar is an article of common consumption in the summer months, under the agreeable terms of lemonade, ginger beer, and other cooling beverages. Within a mile of the centre of London, on a back street, with a very aristocratic name, resides a milkman, celebrated for the thickness and richness of his cream. He was thought to have rare cows. His cream consisted of finely prepared chalk, and a modicum of cow cream, to which a rich butter tint was given by tumeric. The real cream he churned. We cite our London friend, not because we stand alone in the business, but to show the ease with which slams may be palmed off on the best regulated community. In sugar, adulteration is carried to a great extent. Nearly all the low priced sugars contain five per cent. of sand, unless the buyer likes a large lively grain, in which case gravel is made use of. Flour is also considerably mixed—plaster of Paris paying an excellent profit at eleven dollars a barrel. Gin is now made of whiskey, while whiskey has its profits advanced by the proximity of the cistern, soft water imparting that mellow flavor which imbbers suppose comes from age. In Paris, rats take the place of squirrels, while a steak "from the fat ox" is very frequently obtained from a sorrel gelding that did business yesterday in an omnibus. Wicked world this! Well it is!

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

Saturday, September 9th, 1854.

"BORN TO NO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE."

REPUBLICAN STATE CONVENTION. This political meeting, held at Worcester, on Thursday last, was numerously attended and great apparent harmony prevailed. The venerable Robert Rantoul of Beverly, was chosen its President. Hon. Charles Sumner was among the number who addressed the multitude assembled. Anti-Slavery, Prohibition, Lignor Law, and anti-Cuba Resolutions were passed. Hon. Henry Wilson of Natick, was nominated as candidate for Governor, and Hon. Increase Sumner of Great Barrington, for Lieutenant Governor. The Delegates chosen to attend the Convention from this town were—Hon. Charles Francis Adams, Josiah Brigham, Joseph W. Robertson, Edward Avery, Henry Barker and William S. Morton.

"NATIONAL STANDARD." We have received several numbers of a newspaper, with the above title, which has been started in New York City, by Messrs Magnie & Wood. It is a large and well printed sheet, edited in a "faithful, free and fearless" spirit, and decidedly American in principles. Subscription, two dollars per annum.

THE CROPS. The National Intelligencer is fully persuaded that there is much more apprehension expressed about a deficiency in the grain crops of the season than is well founded. It says that there has been more than an average crop of wheat, rye and oats throughout the country, and at least half an average crop of Indian corn.

The Worcester Spy says that the corn crop in central Massachusetts will be nearly or quite an average one.

COUNTERFEITS. Look out for counterfeit five on the Webster Bank, Boston. They are well done, and calculated to deceive. One dollar bills, altered to five, of the Central Bank, Worcester, are in circulation.

CLAM CHOWDER. A good dinner of this admired dish of the epicure can be obtained, to-day, at the Granite Saloon. The renowned "Tom Muddie" feasts upon it at "high meridian." A dish or more for us at the usual hour, afternoon and evening, if it is —

THE COAL TRADE. The amount of coal transported over the Reading (Pa.) Railroad this year, 1,413,274 tons. Excess thus far over last year, 345,163 tons. Transported on Schuylkill canal for the season 594,834 tons. Excess over last year 56,000 tons.

RAILROAD ACCIDENT. From the Plymouth Rock, we learn, that Mrs. Samuel Belcher of East Randolph, was killed instantly on the Fall River Railroad, at Assonet depot, on Saturday afternoon last. She fell from the platform of the cars, and was horribly mangled by being run over. She was on her way to visit a daughter-in-law, who lay dangerously sick. It has since been ascertained that the daughter-in-law died within five minutes of the tragical death of her mother.

GRAHAM'S MAGAZINE, for September, is received. It is embellished with an excellent engraving of Lafayette's interview with Louis XVI and Marie Antoinette; The Biography of Washington, from the dashing and brilliant pen of J. T. Headley, is continued, finely illustrated with two engravings. There is also an article on the Coal Regions of Pennsylvania, illustrated; Thomas De Quincy and his Works; The History of a Bachelor, and a lot more of interesting matter, including choice Poems; Fashion Plates; Sips of Punch, etc., which we have not space to enumerate or comment on. Graham has been published for twenty-seven years, and has a very large circulation.

Fetridge & Co. of Boston, agents; and for sale at the Quincy Bookstore.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE. The September issue in elegant dress was before us some days ago, and is richly freighted with valuable and interesting matter, light and heavy. The leading article—"The Dutch on Manhattan"—tells us much that is interesting in the early history of the Commercial Emporium of our country. The Life of Napoleon and the Story of The Newcomers, by Thackeray, is continued. These articles are all illustrated, as is the one entitled "Who discovered the Northwest Passage, and 'The Hyena,' which gives us the 'peculiarities' of this hideous brute. The Ocean and the Atmosphere is an instructive paper. The usual Comicalities, the Fashion Plates, etc. etc. fill up the number. The contents of this periodical, as the publishers truly observe, are "made up with constant reference to the wants and tastes of the great body of the American people, rather than those of any particular class or profession."

Fetridge & Co. of Boston, agents; and for sale at the Quincy Bookstore.

THE FAIR. We have but little space this week to speak editorially of the very successful Fair of the Episcopal Church, which was opened in the Town Hall, on Tuesday evening, and continued during Wednesday and Thursday evening. The decorations were fit and appropriate, and the arrangements generally reflect credit on the Committee and the ladies who interested themselves in the matter. The Tableaux vivants surpassed expectations, and in short all things were fair—the ladies, the prices of the articles on sale, the rates of postage, the auctioneers, etc.

The fair—a-e in the shape of "ice creams and refreshments" was excellent. For further particulars, read what our learned correspondent "Tom Muddie," has to say.

A GOOD TIME COMING. Niagara Engine Company of this town, accompanied by the Weymouth Band, intend visiting Stoughton on Wednesday next, on invitation of the engine company in that town. A good time is anticipated.

BOAT UPSET AND MEN DROWNED. During the squall on Wednesday evening last, a schooner rigged vessel of about twenty tons burden, was capsized not far from Galloupe's Island, and the two individuals on board drowned. One of the unfortunate persons, Capt. James Pittee, was known to many of our citizens, and the other, Warren Thaxter, had been fishing with him several years. Pittee's body has been recovered.

VERMONT. The recent election in this State, has resulted in the success of the Whig party—a majority in both branches of the Legislature and the entire delegation to Congress.

AUCTION. We learn that the articles which were unsold at the Episcopal Fair will be put up at auction this evening, at the Town Hall, at 7 1-2 o'clock.

THE WEATHER. Thirsty and dirty-faced nature in this vicinity has at last received a good drink and wash. Refreshing rains fell on Friday and Saturday of last week, and on Wednesday night we had a glorious shower, accompanied by a few discharges of "heaven's artillery."

For the Patriot.

The Episcopal Fair.

MR. EDITOR.—This has been Fair week—everybody and his aunt, and the rest of mankind have visited the Town Hall (that beautiful structure, the interior decorations of which have cost the Town so much,) where our friends of the Episcopal Church have made successful endeavors to raise money for the purpose of improving the looks of their neat and commodious house of worship. We, note-book in hand, our boots nicely polished, and dicky standing erect like the side boards of a wheelbarrow, visited the Fair while it was in the full tide of successful experiment; we soon found our friend the Major, and in company with him and a bevy of good natured, wide awake "fellows," made a tour round the hall. The tables were well supplied with useful articles, and those who purchased were sure of getting an equivalent for their money, a thing quite rare at such places. The chance-boxes and post-office were sources of much amusement. Your humble servant paid ten cents, run his hand through a hole into a box, and grabbed what! Why, something done up nicely in brown paper, which, on being opened, proved to be a—a—well, we being an old bach, didn't know what it was, but the pretty young ladies in attendance told us, while a roguish smile passed over her face, that it was a—I think she called it a—small towel. For five cents we obtained a letter at the post-office, which contained a request that we would call at the Patriot office and pay up our subscription. Now you know, friend Green, we don't owe it, and therefore the letter was evidently intended for some one else. We couldn't help thinking, however, while reading it, how strange it is that people neglect to pay the printer. (Walk up gents and pay.) The ladies in attendance were to a man (if I may be allowed the expression, or as Job Sass says, "so to speak,") good looking and wide awake. I don't think I ever before saw so many good looking mothers and daughters behind the tables at a Fair.

The music by the Brintree Band was good, but according to our ideas, a little too heavy for the occasion. And now, Mr. Editor, we come to the crowning glory of the occasion—Miss Congdon's Tableaux. We have seen such things before, and thought them excellent, but these were brought to the very extreme of perfection. Too much praise cannot be awarded the enterprising go-ahead Miss C. for the pains she took to make them what they ought to be, and certainly were, perfect living pictures,—pictures that would bear to be looked upon time after time. The costumes were brilliant, and judiciously arranged; the positions assumed were kept even by the smallest children, in the most perfect manner. In fact, the actors done as well as the oldest professors of the sock and buskin could have done, and Miss Congdon won heaps of glory as a manager. We understand Miss C. intends, if the people will support her in it, to give a series of Tableau entertainments and appropriate the proceeds in fitting up the Town Hall. We think that with dancing between the scenes it would be immensely popular and have a great run. At any rate we hold up both hands for it, and stand ready to lend our feeble aid to the cause. Success attend Miss C. and the cause. We will close by saying the Fair has been successful and the people pleased. TOM MUDDIE.

Since writing the above, we have learned with pleasure that Miss Congdon is to have a benefit on Tuesday evening next, on which occasion the entertainment will consist of Tableaux and Dancing. Give her what she deserves, a crowded house. Goe was and awl, boath grait and smorl. T. M.

Summary of Intelligence.

The Bride of the Wreck.

I was a lonely sort of bachelor, and had never yet known what young men style the "passion." Of passion I had enough, as my old mate yonder can tell you. I broke his head twice and his arm once, in fits of it; but he always seemed to love me the better, and clings to me now very much as two pieces of the same chip cling together when drifting at sea. We are the sole survivors of a thousand wrecks, and of the company that sailed with us two years ago, no other one is left afloat. I had been a sailor from my boyhood, and when I was twenty-five, I may safely say no man was more fit to command a vessel among the mariners of England. And at this time my uncle died and left me his fortune. I had never seen him, and hardly knew of his existence; but I had now speaking evidence of the fact that he had existed, and equally good proof that he existed no longer.

I was very young and strong in limb, and I think stout in heart, and I was possessed of the rental of some thousands per annum. What was there to bar my enjoyment of the goods of life? No bar, indeed—but I felt sorely the lack of the means of enjoyment. I was a sailor in every sense. My education was tolerable and I had some books, but my tastes were nautical, and I pined on shore. You will easily understand, then, why I built a yacht, and spent much time on her. She was a fine craft, suited to my taste in every respect, and I remembered with a sigh, now, the happy days which I have spent in the "Foam." I used to read considerably in my cabin, and occasionally, indeed weekly, invited parties of gentlemen to cruise with me. But the foot of a lady had never been set upon the deck of my boat, and I began to have an old bachelor's sort of pride in the fact. Yet, I confess to you a secret longing for some kind of affection different from any I had heretofore known, and a restlessness when men talked of beautiful women in my presence.

One summer evening I was at the old hall in which my uncle died, and was entirely alone. Towards sunset I was surprised, while looking over my books, by the entrance of a gentleman hastily announced and giving indications of no little excitement.

"Your pardon, sir, for my unceremonious entrance. My horses have run away with my carriage, and dashed it to pieces near your park gate. My father was badly injured, and my sister is watching over him. I have taken the liberty to ask permission to bring him to your residence."

Of course my consent was instantly given, and my own carriage dispatched to the park gate.

Mr. Sinclair was a gentleman of fortune, residing about forty miles from me; and his father, an invalid, fifty years or more of age, was on his way, in company with his son, to his son's house, there to die and be buried. They were strangers to me, but I made them welcome to my house, as if it were their own, and insisted upon their using it.

Miss Sinclair was the first woman who had crossed my door since I had been possessor of the hall. And well might she have been loved by a better man than I. She was very small and very beautiful—of the size of Venus, which all men worship as the perfection of womanly beauty; but having a soft blue eye, strangely shaded by jet black brows, her face presented the contrast of purity of whiteness in the complexion, set off by raven hair; and yet that hair hanging in clustering curls, unconfined by comb or fillet, and the whole face lit up with an expression of gentle trust and complete confidence either in all around her, or else in her own indomitable determination. For Mary Sinclair had a mind of her own, and a far-seeing one too. She was nineteen then.

Her father died in the house, and I attended the solemn procession that bore his remains over hill and valley to the old church in which his ancestors were laid. Once after that I called on the family and then avoided them. I cannot tell you what was the cause of the aversion I had to entering that house, or approaching the influence of that matchless girl. I believe that I feared the magic of her beauty, and was impressed with my own unworthiness to love or be loved by her. I knew her associates were of the noble, the educated, and the refined, and that I was none of those. What then could I expect but misery, if I yielded to the charms of that exquisite beauty, or graces which I knew were in her soul?

A year passed, and I was a very boy in my thoughts of her; I persuaded myself a thousand times that I did not love her and a thousand times determined to prove it by entering her presence. At length I threw myself into the vortex of London society, and was lost in the whirlpool.

One evening, at a crowded assembly, I was standing near a window in a recess, talking with a lady, when I felt a strange thrill. I cannot describe it to you, but its effect was visible to my companion, who instantly said, "You are unwell Mr. Stewart, are you not?" Your face became suddenly flushed, and your hand trembled so as to shake the curtain."

It was inexplicable to myself, but I was startled at the announcement of Mr. and Miss Sinclair. I turned and saw she was entering on her brother's arm, more beautiful than ever. How I escaped I did not know, but I did so.

Thrice afterwards I was warned of her presence in the same mysterious way, till I believed there was some mysterious link between us two, of unknown, but powerful character. I have since learned to believe in the communication of spirit—sometimes without material intervention.

I heard of her frequently, as engaged to a Mr. Waller, a man whom I knew well, and was ready to do honor as worthy of her love. When at length I saw as I supposed, very satisfactory evidence of the truth of the rumor, I left London, and met them no more. The same rumor followed me in letters; and yet I was mad enough to dream of Mary Sinclair, until months after I awoke to the sense of what a fool I had been. Convinced of this, I went on board my yacht about midsummer, and for four whole weeks never set my foot on shore.

One sultry day, when pitch was frying on the deck, in the hot sun, we rolled heavily in the Bay of Biscay, and I passed the afternoon under a sail on the board quarter deck. Towards evening I fancied a storm was brewing, and having made all ready for it, smoked on the taffrail until midnight, and then turned in. Will you believe me, I felt that strange thrill through my veins, as I lay in my hammock, and awoke with it fifteen minutes before the watch on deck called suddenly to the man at the wheel—"Port, port your helm! a sail on the lee bow! steady so."

I was on the deck in an instant, and saw that a stiff breeze was blowing, and a small schooner showing no lights, had crossed our forepeak within pistol shot and was now bearing up to the northwest. The sky was cloudy and dark, but the breeze was very steady, and I went below again; and after vainly endeavoring to account for the emotions I had felt, in any reasonable way, I at length fell asleep, and the rocking of the vessel, as she flew before the wind, gave just motion enough to my hammock to lull me into a sound slumber. But I dreamed all night of Mary Sinclair. I dreamed of her, but it was in unpleasant dreams. I saw her standing on the deck of the "Foam," and as I would advance towards her, the form of Waller would interpose. I would fancy at times that my arms were around her, and her form was resting against my side, while her head lay on my shoulder; and then by the strange mutation of dreams, it was not I, but Waller, that was folding her; and I was chained to a post, looking at them; and she would kiss him, and again the kiss would be burning on my lips.

The morning found me wide awake, reasoning myself out of my fancies. By noon had enough to do. The ocean was roused. A tempest was out on the sea, and the "Foam" went before it. Night came down gloomily. The very blackness of darkness was on the water as we flew before the terrible blast. I was on the deck, lashed to the wheel, by which I stood, with a knife in my hand to cut the lashing, if necessary. We had not a rag of sail on her, and yet she moved more like a bird than a boat, from wave to wave. Again and again a blue wave went over us, but she came up like a duck, shook off the water, and dashed on. Now she staggered as a blow was on her bow, that might have struck a man-of-war, but she kept gallantly on; and now she rolled heavily and slowly, but never abated her swift flight towards shore. It was midnight when the wind was the highest. The howling of the corgage was demoniacal. Now a scream, now a shriek, now a wail, and a laugh of mocking madness. On, on we flew.

I looked up and turned quite round the horizon, but could see no sky, no sea, no cloud—all was blackness. At that moment I left again that strange thrill, and that instant fancied a blackness ahead; and the next with a crash, and a plunge, the "Foam" was gone! Down went my gallant boat, and with her another vessel, unseen in the black night. The wheel to which I had been lashed, had broken loose and gone over with me before she sank. It was heavy and I cut it away, and it went down in the deep sea above my boat. And seeing a spar, I seized it and a thrill of agony shot through me as I recognized the delicate figure of a woman. I drew her to me, and lashed her to the spar by my side, and so in the black night, we two floated away over the stormy ocean.

My companion was senseless, for all I knew, dead. A thousand emotions passed through my mind in the next five minutes. Who was my companion on the slight spar? Was I with the body of only a human being, or was there a spark of life left? and how could I fan it to a flame? Would it not be better to let her sink than float off with me, thus alone to starve or die of thirst and agony. I chafed her hands, her forehead, her shoulders. In the dense darkness, I could not see a feature of her face, nor tell if she were old or young—scarcely white or black. The silence on the sea was fearful. So long as I had been on the deck of my boat, the wind whistling through my ropes and round the spars, had made a continual sound; but now I heard nothing but the occasional sparkling of the spray, the dash of a foam-cap, or the heavy sound of the wind pressing on my ears.

At length she moved her hand feebly in mine. How my heart leaped at that slight evidence that I was not alone on the wide ocean. I redoubled my exertions; I passed one of her arms around my neck to keep it out of the water, while I chafed the other with both of mine. I felt the clasp of that arm tighten; I bowed my head towards hers. She drew me close to her and laid her cheek against mine. I let it rest there—it might warm her, and so help to give her life. Then she nestled close to my bosom and whispered, thank you. Why did my brain so wildly throb in my head at that whispered sentence? She knew not where she was, that was clear. Her mind was wandering. At that instant the end of the spar struck some heavy object, and we were dashed by a huge wave over it, and to my joy were left on a floating deck. I cut the lashing from the spar, and fastened my companion and myself to the new raft or wreck, I knew not which, and all that time that arm was round my neck, and rigid as if in death.

Now came the long, wild wail, that precedes the breaking up of the storm. The air seemed filled with wailing spirits mournfully singing and sighing. I never thought of her as anything more than a human being. It was that humanity, that dear kindness of life that endeared her to me. I wound my arms around her, and drew her close to my heart, and bowed my head over her, and in the wilderness of a moment I pressed my lips to hers, in a long, passionate kiss of intense love and agony. She gave it back, moaning some name of endearment, wound both arms around my neck, and laying her head on my shoulder with her forehead pressed to my cheek, fell into a calm slumber. That kiss burns on my lips this hour. Half a century of the cold kisses of the world have not sufficed to chill its influence. It thrills me now as then! It was madness with idle worship of the form God gave in the image himself, which in that hour I adored as even God! I feel the unearthly joy again to-day, as I remember the clasp of those unknown arms, and the pressure of that forehead. I knew not, I cared not, if she were old and haggard, or young and fair.

I only knew and rejoiced with joy untold, that she was human, mortal, of my own kin, by the great Father of our race.

It was a night of thought and emotions, and phantoms, that never can be described. Morning dawned gravely; the first faint gleam of light showed me a driving cloud above my head—it was welcomed with a shudder. I hated light. I wanted to float over that heavenly ocean with that form clinging to me, and my arms round it, and my lips ever and anon pressed to the passionless lips of the heavy sleeper. I asked no light. It was an intruder on my domain and would drive her from my embrace. I was mad.

But as I saw the face of my companion gradually revealed in the dawning light; as my eyes began to make out one by one the features, and at length the terrible truth came slowly burning into my brain, and I mourned aloud in my agony, "God of heaven, she is dead!" And it was Mary Sinclair. But she was not dead.

We floated all day long on the sea, and at midnight of the next night I hailed a ship and they took us off. Every man from the "Foam," and the other vessel was saved with one exception. The other vessel was the Fairy, a schooner yacht, belonging to a friend of Miss Sinclair, with whom she and her brother, and a party of ladies and gentlemen had started but three days previously, for a week's cruise. I need not tell you how I explained that strange thrill, as the schooner crossed our bow, the night before the collision, and which I felt again at the moment of the crash, nor what interpretation I gave to the wild tumult of emotions all that long dreary night.

I married Mary Sinclair, and buried her thirty years afterwards; and sometimes have the same evidence of her presence now, that I used to have when she lived upon the same earth with me.

Preparation of Coffee at Mocha.

The coffee plant grows sixteen or eighteen feet high, with an upright stem covered with a light brown bark. Its branches grow horizontally and opposite, crossing each other, and form a pyramidal appearance. The leaves grow on the opposite side of the branches, to the length of four or five inches, and to half that width in the middle. The flowers growing in bunches at the junction of the leaves, are white, maturing first into green, then red berries resembling bunches of cherries, each of which contains two kernels. But one crop is annually produced, which is gathered in the months of January and February. For the purpose of being dried in the sun, the gathered coffee is spread on the house tops, or cleared spaces of ground, where it is frequently watered to open the koke, or shell, which is always separated by grinding before packing. The coffee raised at Annas and Sana, which is held in the best estimation, is generally dried upon temporary floors, covered with a compost of clay and cow dung, which protects the coffee from vermin, and also gives it a permanent yellowish color. How perceptibly such a compost may affect the taste of the coffee would doubtless be a matter of inquiry with the cow-loving Hindu house-wife, who uses a solution of it to purify her parlors, ornament her walls and doorways, and for numerous other purposes.

Large quantities of coffee arrive at Mocha, from March till the latter part of July, from the coffee districts within twenty days journey. Camels are employed in its transportation, each of which carries about six hundred pounds, contained in two sacks. They are driven in long trains of fifty or more, arranged one behind another, the head of each being tied to the tail of the camel immediately before him. Thus arranged, but few drivers are necessary. All coffee from the country is first taken to the custom house, a large building one hundred feet square, near the sea gate, where it is stored to be inspected by the Governor, who visits the custom house daily. Here, also, the duties are fixed, at the rate of seven per cent. on English, and three per cent. on American imports. A doubled duty is imposed on smuggled goods. From the custom house the coffee is taken to the godowns, or warehouses of the merchants, several of which are attached to the walls of the custom house and rented by the Government. There it undergoes the process of being cleared of pebbles and dirt by means of sieves. Those who do this tedious work of garbling, though expert in their calling, earn but the value of five or six cents daily, a portion of which earnings is paid to one of their number who acts as overseer, and to whom the purchaser must complain if he has any fault to find. An active man may garble two or three bales in a day, and a smart woman half as much. Having been cleaned, the coffee is packed in bags for exportation, and if good should be free from white and black kernels and have an aromatic smell. But few Arabs, and those the wealthier class, indulge as a general habit in the luxury of coffee. It has often been disputed whether coffee does not come under the prohibition of the Koran, which forbids the use of strong and intoxicating liquor, as it is a well known fact that the fumes of coffee have some effect on the imagination. Its use is however tolerated, and many Arabs say "a dish of coffee and a pipe of tobacco are a complete entertainment." They drink it without either milk or sugar, after it has been pounded fine in a mortar and then steeped. All classes use a very palatable beverage made from the koke, of coffee shell, which goes by the name of hauka. It can be obtained at the numerous and much frequented coffee shops for half a cent a quart.

Norfolk Agricultural Society.

A meeting of the Trustees and Committees of the Society, was held at the Phoenix House in Dedham, on Tuesday, September 5th—the President, Hon. Marshall P. Wilder, in the chair.

It was Voted, That the Committee appointed to visit the several towns be requested to solicit contributions of stock for the Annual Exhibition.

The following gentlemen were chosen a delegation to represent this society at the great Stock Exhibition to be held at Springfield, (Ohio,) under the auspices of the National Agricultural Society.

The President, Hon. Marshall P. Wilder; the Vice Presidents, Hon. Benjamin V. French, S. D. Bradford, Esq., John Gardner, Esq., Rev. Charles C. Sewall, Rev. Ralph Sanger; the Secretary, Hon. Edward L. Keyes; and Trustees, Henry Partridge, Jr., Rev. Thomas T. Richmond, Joseph H. Billings, Esq., Dr. Wm. G. S. Morton, Charles Ellis, Esq., Wm. B. Kingsbury, Esq., Artemas Aldrich, Esq., S. J. Capen, Esq., and A. D. Williams, Esq.

The following gentlemen were appointed to visit, on behalf of this society, the several County Societies, as follows:—

Essex Society, Rev. C. C. Sewall and Freedom Guild; Bristol Society, Hon. B. V. French; Middlesex Society, Cheever Newhall, Esq.; Plymouth Society, A. D. Weld, Esq., and Jonathan French, Esq.

Samuel Downer of Dorchester, was appointed Chairman of the Committee on Spading Match, and Jonathan French to fill a vacancy.

Franklin King of Dorchester, was appointed Chairman of the Committee on Swine, and Hiram Jones appointed to fill a vacancy.

The Treasurer was authorized to procure insurance to the amount of three thousand dollars on the Agricultural Hall of the Society, in the office of the Norfolk Mutual Fire Insurance Company.

Committees on Reception of Live Stock.

Horned Cattle—Hiram Jones and Luther Eaton.

Horses—J. H. Billings and Samuel P. Alden.

Swine—Thomas Smith and Francis Alden.

Poultry—B. N. Sawin.

Richard Richardson of Medway, was added to the Committee on Horses.

Thomas Adams, Esq. was appointed as Chief Marshal of the Exhibition, with power to appoint assistants.

On motion of Hon. B. V. French, the Committee of Arrangements were authorized to expend such sums as may be necessary to protect the grounds and buildings of the Society, and to guard the entrance to the Exhibition.

A proposition from Capt. Cushman, of the "Canton Union Life Guards," to perform escort duty on the day of the Annual Exhibition, was received, and referred to a committee, consisting of Hon. B. V. French, Rev. C. C. Sewall, and Thoms T. Richmond, which reported verbally, in substance, that "inasmuch as martial aid to the peaceful pursuits of agriculture, had not been customary, and could not be regarded as being perfectly in harmony with them, and should the precedent be established, might conduce to unnecessary trouble and expense, the proposition be respectfully declined."

This report, with a vote of thanks to the company for the liberal offer of their services, were unanimously adopted.

After the distribution of a quantity of seeds from the Patent Office, forwarded by the Hon. J. Wiley Edmunds, and Hon. S. H. Walley, members of Congress, the meeting adjourned.

A Story about a Parrot.

The subjoined incident was sent to the Hingham Journal by a Southern correspondent, as related by a Virginia negro. If it is true, the parrot was certainly a remarkable bird:

"You see," said he, "dis parrot belonged to a baker in Richmond. Now, each baker 'lowed to make a certain number of loaves every day, and no more, 'cordin' to how many customers he got; 'cause if dey bake too much, dey will be servin' out stale bread to customers. Well, dis baker had baked more'n his share one day, and hid de rest ob 'um under de counter. De parrot was hangin' in his cage, and see it all. Bime-by, in comes de inspector, and finds de bread all right, and is goin' out agin satisfied, when de parrot cocks his eye at him, and sings out, 'Dere's more bread under de counter!'" So de inspector grabs it, 'cordin' to law, and carries it off. Well, den de baker goes to de parrot, werry mad, and takes him by de head and fetched him a twitch or two, and dings him in de gutter for dead, 'longside of a pig just dead of de measles. Bime-by, de parrot begins to crawl about, his feathers a stickin' out, and his head lopped on one side, and den he stops and looks at de pig, werry pitiful, and says he, 'did you say any ting about de bread?'"

Ages of Fishes.

Pike and carp, in artificial ponds, have been repeatedly found, with gold rings in their fins, and other kinds of labels, on which were also found dates, that proved conclusively that one hundred years had elapsed since the inscription was made. Gesser speaks of a pike that was known to be two hundred and sixty-seven years old. It is affirmed by some of the French writers, that several pike are in a pond, which formerly belonged to the Duke of Orleans, so very aged, that their original complexion is completely lost; they have become of a dingy hue, and actually give the spectator the idea of extreme old age. Cartilaginous fishes have still a greater prospect of living to an advanced period. Instead of bones, as previously remarked, their skeletons are elastic, having but a small portion of earthly matter in them. As the vessels secrete but little ossific matter, they do not become rigid, as in the land animal—the heart is in no danger of being converted into bone—indeed, we do not know why many of them might not live and continue to grow for a thousand years. It was at one time thought that the circles discoverable on the ends of the vertebrae of the osseous tribes, indicated the age—as the rings on the extremity of a log marked the years of the growth of the tree. These are, unfortunately, no guides; and we, therefore, regret that we know of no mode, at the present day, of solving a problem of the highest interest to the curious. Of the marine fishes, the sharks unquestionably reach a truly patriarchal age.

SLEEP. Exposed, as fishes must necessarily be, to the voracious jaws of millions of belligerent, as well as hungry associates, it would seem hardly possible that they should find a safe opportunity for this kind of rest, however much they might at any period require it. Again, being without eyelids, they would be regarded at first thought as organized to require no suspension of the powers of vision. Impossible as it is to speak with certainty on this point, we are fully persuaded that they not only require sleep, but that they also find safe and convenient times to enjoy that sort of repose. Gold-fishes, in vases, repose regularly through the night, after the lights have been extinguished. This is inferred from their remaining precisely in one position six or eight hours at a time.—Smith's Book.

Relationship, or Blood.

The closest of all blood relationship is that of the mother and the child, and it constitutes the very best example that we can select to examine the security which blood provides as a basis of relationship. The spiritual feelings originating in this relationship are very powerful. Nothing can exceed the love of a mother; it will make greater sacrifices than any other passion; it will sacrifice truth itself and justice—anything. The advocacy of a mother defies all opposition and all argument; it does not originate in reason, and reason has nothing to do with it; a mother loves her wayward and perverse child in spite of reason. Moreover, it is not a spiritual relationship, and has nothing to do with the mind and temper of the child; its root is material; it is pure blood relationship, but not the most permanent or exalted. It becomes offensive when too prominently exhibited, and not unfrequently it ceases with the childhood and helplessness of the offspring. Mothers sometimes become rivals to daughters and hate them ferrely. Fathers hate sons, and sons fathers; blood is no security. The tie will break; we see it break throughout the whole animal creation. It lasts with inferior animals only till the young are able to provide for themselves, and then it ceases altogether. It is thus discovered that consanguinity is not the root or germ of relationship at all. Did mothers never hate their children—did animals never lose parental attachment for their offspring—then we might boldly affirm that there was a root or germ of relationship in blood. But we have abundant evidence to the contrary—evidence to prove that blood relations are least of all to be depended upon, and that the relationship weakens with time till at last it disappears altogether, superseded by some spiritual relationship, or relationship of pure feeling, which takes its place. "Therefore shall a man leave father and mother and cleave unto his wife," and if parents and children thus part, much more so brothers and sisters. But marriage is the great separating principle: families are seldom altogether disjointed except by marriage. Blood keeps hold till seized by the spirit. All begins and ends in this mysterious love or spirit or feeling, which has no relationship with blood further than the common relationship of species. This regenerates

The fanatic is a man of one idea, which, having entered into his mind, takes possession of his brain, is cherished and cultivated until it grows and expands till he has no room left for anything else. It becomes the motive power of his being, and he goes on preaching and promulgating his opinion, riding over and trampling under foot the views and sentiments of other and more liberal minds, casting ridicule upon them, and as much desisting to weigh and consider them

QUINCY PATRIOT.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 16.

Norfolk Agricultural Society

Cattle Show.

THE Officers and Trustees of the Norfolk Agricultural Society announce to the public that their Fifth Annual Exhibition will take place at Dedham, on

TUESDAY and WEDNESDAY,
the 26th and 27th days of September.

This Society was formed and incorporated
for the encouragement of Agriculture and Horticulture, Manufacturing and Mechanic Arts, in the County of Norfolk. In order to promote the important objects comprehended in its plan,
the Trustees deem it expedient and essential to hold Annual Exhibitions, at which the products of Agricultural Science and Industry, Mechanical Skill and Ingenuity, may be displayed before the public. They believe that such exhibitions cannot fail to produce a generous and healthy rivalry in all the departments of useful industry, stimulate exertion, encourage modest and deserving merit, elevate and reform the public taste,
awaken to life and activity unimproved talent, ingenuity and skill, contribute to the increase and diffusion of valuable knowledge, and, in short, tend generally to the cultivation, improvement, prosperity and happiness of the whole people.

They, therefore, respectfully invite the Agriculturists, Horticulturists, Manufacturers, Mechanics and Artisans of the County of Norfolk, to offer for exhibition and premium, at the time and place above mentioned, the products of their labor, skill, ingenuity and taste in all the departments of useful and ornamental industry, such as Boots, Shoes, Carpentry, Manufactures of Straw, Wood, Metal, Wool, Cotton, Flax, &c. &c. Specimens of Female Taste and Ingenuity are especially solicited, and it is expected that they will form an interesting and attractive part of the exhibition.

The products of Agriculture, Agricultural Implements, Domestic Manufactures, Prize Essays, &c. for which premiums are offered, are especially enumerated in the list of premiums before published by order of the Society—to which we beg respectfully refer—the Trustees, stepping beyond these limits, desire to appeal to the public spirit and local pride of Mechanists, Inventors, and Artisans for the means of forming an exhibition which shall be creditable to the taste, ingenuity, and skill of our people, and honorable to the county. As far as it may be within the power of the Society, Premiums, Gritutes, and Diplomas will be awarded for all articles of merit deemed worthy of such distinction. Judges will be appointed to examine and report upon all articles that may be offered, and lists of such articles, with the names of producers, manufacturers or inventors, will be preserved in the records of the Society, and published for the information and benefit of the community.

THE NEW AGRICULTURAL HALL
will afford room for the display of Vegetables, Fruits and Flowers, Domestic Manufactures, and also a commodious room for dining one thousand persons.

All stock and articles for which Premiums are offered, will be received until 12 o'clock, on Tuesday, the first day of the Exhibition. Other articles intended for Exhibition will be received until 9 o'clock A. M. of Wednesday, the second day of the Exhibition.

Persons intended to compete for the premiums on Plothing, are reminded that they are required to enter their names with the Secretary on or before SATURDAY, the 23rd of September.

All packages by Railroad or otherwise, intended for the exhibition, and all communications, must be addressed to the Secretary, at Dedham, who will see that they are properly attended to.
Contributors are especially requested to send forward their articles in good season, to prevent confusion, and in order that they may be properly arranged.

Contributors will be entitled to free Admission to the Exhibition.

TUESDAY, the first day of the Exhibition, from 12 o'clock M. will be devoted to the exhibition of all articles and stock offered for Premium by the Judges, who are requested to meet at the Hall punctually at that hour.

The Grand Public Exhibition will take place on WEDNESDAY, Sept. 27.
The order of arrangements will be as follows:
Plothing Match at half-past nine o'clock Exhibition of T. Teams and Drawing Match at half-past eleven o'clock.

Address at the Church, by Rev. James Richardson, JUN., of Kingston, at twelve o'clock.
Dinner at the Hall—for those holding tickets
—at one o'clock, P. M.

Award of Premiums at the Table, immediately after dinner.

Should the weather on Tuesday, the first day of the Exhibition, prove unfavorable, animals and articles for Premium will be received until nine o'clock on Wednesday.

It will be observed that Tuesday will be devoted to the inspection of animals and articles by the Officers and Committees of the Society, and that the Grand Exhibition Day for the public will be on WEDNESDAY.

Tickets of Admission, TWELVE AND A HALF CENTS.

It is understood that the Society will provide food for the Cattle while they remain on the ground.

Those intending to contribute stock, are requested to send a notice of the number and description of their animals to the Secretary, previous to the day of the Annual Exhibition.

Poetry.

Little Willie's Gone Away.

I speak to many a mother,
O list ye what I say!
'Tis a short and simple story—
Little Willie's gone away!

One morn we left him sleeping
Upon his pillow fair,
While a snowy, white winged angel
Was watching o'er him there.

We know it was an angel,
For o'er his face there stole
A smile of radiant sweetness,
As though God touched his soul.

And we turned away and left him,
'Till the blessed dream was o'er;
But the smile upon his features,
Made us love him more and more.

We thought if God so loved him
As to send an angel there,
It were a double blessing
For us that love to share.

Day by day the angel watched him,
We saw him fairer grow,
Alas! we feared e'en too fair
For our cold world below.

We did not dream the angel
Would woo our child away;
We were too blessed in the thought
That it would always stay.

One evening as the twilight
Came softly o'er the sea,
And the flowers had closed their eyes
In woodland and on lea,

Our little Willie left us
For that bright world away,
To awaken in the morning
Of an eternal day.

On his small bed we laid him,
While tears like rain-drops fell,
We prayed that God might spare him,
With an earnest note can tell.

But the Wisdom above us
Knew better far than we,
And the Spirit softly whispered
Our petition might not be.

We now bless God that took him,
Though it grieved us sad and sore,
He's where the white winged angels
Will love him evermore.

And ne'er again forever,
While smiles around him play,
Will be heard a voice exclaiming,
"Little Willie's gone away!"

The Poor Man to his Son.

Work, work, my boy, be not afraid,
Look labor boldly in the face,
Take up the hammer or the spade,
And bludge on for your humble place.

Hold up your brow in honest pride,
Though rough and sweat your hands may be,
Such hands are sap-veins that provide
The life-blood of the Nation's tree.

There's honor in the toiling pair,
That finds us in the furrowed fields;
It stamps a crest upon the heart
Worth more than all your quartered shields.

Work, work, my boy, and murmur not,
The toiling gear betrays no shame;
The grim of large-soul leaves no blot,
And labor glows the meekest name.

And man is never half so blest
As when the busy day is spent,
So as to make his evening rest
A holiday of glad content.

God grant thee but a due reward,
A guerdon portion fair and just,
And then ne'er think thy station hard;
But, work, my boy, work, hope, and trust!

Anecdotes.

Two Irishmen were in prison, one for stealing a cow, and the other for stealing a watch. "Mike," said the cow stealer, one day, "what o'clock is it?"

"Och, Pat, I haven't my watch handy, but I think it is about milking time."

"Why don't you wheel the barrow of coals, Ned?" quoth a learned vender of black diamonds to his man.

"It is not a very hard job, there is an inclined plane to relieve you."

"Aye, master," replied Ned, who had more relish for wit than work, "the plane may be inclined, but hang me if I am."

"Gran'm'm," said a little ragged urchin, "why don't the blacklegs never try to cheat the fellows that work in the screw factory?"

"Why, I'm sure I don't know."

"Why is it?" said the dotting old lady.

"Bekase," replied the genius, "you can't come no shindys over them covies; they're too screw-tinzen, ha, ha! Gran'm'm, I want a doughnut."

A Yankee boy had a whole Dutch cheese set before him by waggish friends, who, however, gave him no knife.

"This is a funny cheese, Uncle Joe," said he, "but where shall I cut it?"

"Oh, said the grinning friend, "cut it where you like."

"Very well," said the Yankee, coolly putting it under his arm, "I'll cut it at home."

Terms for the Season.

ENTIRE Sets of Teeth, from $35 to $50.
Full upper or under set, from $15 to $40.
Parts of Sets, in favorable cases, from $1.50 to $3.50 per tooth. Pivot Teeth from $1.50 to $3.00.
Extracting 25 cents, with one filling, 50 cents with the use of ether. All operations warranted, and the finest gold used.

Opinions of the Boston Press.
"The long experience and correct taste of Dr. Stocking, of this city, eminently qualify him to set artificial teeth, that look well, feel well, wear well, and work well; and, what is rather remarkable, he seems to be better pleased with furnishing good work than with exorbitant prices for it—a trait not common with the profession."—Evening Traveller.

"We advise all toothless persons to call on Dr. Stocking of this city, and procure some artificial teeth of his manufacture. We offer this advice with the more confidence, because whoever he undertakes to do, he does well. No one who is acquainted with him can doubt that Nature designed him for a dentist of the right stamp."—Morning Post.

"No Dentist among us is better qualified to improve the condition of the mouth, by setting, filling, extracting, cleansing, regulating, &c. of the teeth, than Dr. Stocking of this city. His reputation for Dental skill is too well established to be doubted."—Evening Transcript.

"Dr. Stocking of this city, possesses the right qualifications for his profession;—requiring, as it does, a combination of patience, care, skill and gentleness, with a thorough knowledge of all the intricacies of the business."—Boston Journal.

"If any of our readers have got the tooth-ache, and wish to know who can extract it with the least pain, we should say, Dr. Stocking; or, if they want their teeth filled, and filled right, we should say, by all means go to Dr. Stocking. And, above all, if you wish for artificial teeth that every body calls the perfect art, he is the one to furnish them, and at a reasonable price."—Quincy Times.

Two Kinds of Courage.

BY S. COBB, JR.

Not many years since the good ship Ponto sailed from Boston, bound to Sumatra. She was commanded by Capt. Isaac Jacobs, a good seaman and a naturally good hearted man, but in his long career beneath the trident of Neptune, he had imbibed many of those false ideas prevalent among seamen, and had come to look upon the sailor's life as one which necessarily did away with those finer and warmer traits of character that mark the humane and generous landsman. In this wise, Isaac Jacobs sometimes lost sight of true merit where it actually existed.

Among the crew of the Ponto, on her present voyage, was a young man named, Caleb Baker. He had shipped only three days before the ship sailed. He was a slender young man, with a fair prepossessing countenance, light blue eyes, and light brown hair. Though light in build, yet he was well stocked with muscles and his motion was quick and energetic. His appearance was calculated to predispose beholders in his favor.

One day shortly after the ship had left port, Baker was busy about some matters of his own in one of the gangways, when one of the men, a rough uncouth fellow, by the name of Bunkton, came along and gave the clothes bag of Baker a kick out of his way, thereby scattering a number of things about the deck.

"I wish you'd be careful," said Baker, as he moved to gather up his things.

"Then keep your things out o' my way, gruffly return Bunkton.

"They are not in your way."

"Do you mean to tell me I lie?"

"I said the things were not in your way."

"And I say they were. Now don't you dispute me again."

"Very well, have it your own way," returned Baker, as he drew his bag in closer towards the bulwarks.

"And don't you be impudent, neither," protestingly added Bunkton.

"Look ye, Bunkton, if you've any business of your own, you'd better mind it."

"Eh, lubber? I'll show you my business. Take that."

As Bunkton spoke, he struck the young man upon the face. The crew had most of them gathered about the place, and arrangements were made for a fight.

"Just come forward—and I'll show you my business," cried Bunkton, bristling about with his fist doubled up.

"A fight! a fight!" cried half a dozen of the men. "Don't stand that, Baker."

The young man's eye flashed as he received the blow, and there was a quick quivering of the muscles in his hand, but he had made no motion to strike.

"Ain't you goin' to take it up," asked Bunkton.

"No, I want nothing do with you," returned Caleb.

"Then you are a coward!" uttered Bunkton with a contemptuous tone and look.

Young Baker calmly replied to the taunt, and Bunkton became still more savage. Those who knew anything about ocean life, will understand the sentiment of the crew upon such matters as the present. They could comprehend but one kind of courage, and the moment Baker refused to fight they set him down as an arrant coward. At first they were prepossessed in his favor, for Bunkton was a quarrelsome fellow, and they hoped Caleb would flog him; but when they saw him quietly turn away and resume his work, they began to taunt him too.

"What's all this?" asked Capt. Jacobs, who had been attracted to the spot.

The matter was explained to him.

"Didn't resent it?" uttered the Captain,

looking with mingled surprise and contempt upon Caleb.

"Why didn't you knock him down, Baker?"

"Because I don't want to fight with any man sir."

"And you will allow yourself to be struck and not resent it?"

"I will defend myself in case of danger, but I will not so abuse myself as to engage in a brutal fight when it can possibly be avoided. I have as yet done wrong to no man; but were I to fight with one of my shipmates, I should wrong him and myself both."

"Then you will have yourself looked upon as one who may be struck with impunity?"

A quick flush passed over the young man's face, as the Captain thus spoke, but he was soon calm.

"I mean, sir, he returned, to give no occasion to any one to strike me; yet Bunkton struck me, but evidently he suffers more than I do."

Bunkton gave Caleb the lie, and again tried to urge him into a fight, but the Captain interfered, and quiet was restored.

From that time Caleb Baker was looked upon as a coward. At first they taunted him, but uniform kindness put a stop to these outward manifestations, and the feelings of the crew were expressed by their looks. Bunkton took every occasion he could to annoy the young man, for he had taken his oath that he would 'have a fight out of the coward yet!'

The rest of the crew might have let the matters pass had not Bunkton's continued behavior kept alive the idea of Baker's cowardice.

None save himself knew the great struggle that went on in the young man's bosom; but he had resolved that he would not fight except in actual and necessary self defence, and he adhered to his principle. He performed his duties faithfully, and Capt. Jacobs was forced to admit that though Baker was a coward, he was yet a good sailor.

Thus matters passed until the ship had doubled the Cape of Good Hope, and entered the Indian Ocean. It was towards the close of a day that had been sultry and oppressive that a stiff breeze sprang from the southward.

It came in quick, cool gusts, and the spread canvas only flapped before it.

"We are likely to have a blow, soon," said the mate.

"Not much, I think," returned the Captain as he took a survey of the horizon. "This spitting will die away, and I think the wind will then come round from the westward. However, it may be well enough to shorten sail. You may take in the t'gallants, and close reef tops'ls."

This order was quickly obeyed, and as the Captain had predicted, the spitting gusts died away, but there was no wind come out from the westward. It grew dark, but no wind had come. About ten o'clock those who were on deck were startled by a sudden darkening of the stars, and they saw a great black cloud rolling up from the southward. It soon hung over the ship like a pall, and the men began to be frightened. The Captain was called, and before he came on deck there was a crash as though the very heavens had been rent asunder. The old ship trembled in every joint, and a huge ball of fire rolled down the mainmast. Another and another crashing of the lightning came, and at length the electric light began to play about the ship in wild fantastic streams.

"The forecast is struck!" shouted one of the men. "See where its head is shivered!"

All eyes were turned to the spot, and by the next wild flash the men could see that a dangerous havoc had been made with the mainmast. The cap was shivered, the starboard check nearly stripped off, and the trestletrees were quivering. Of course the heavy topmast was only held in its place by its dubious trestletrees, and the maintop threatened every instant to come thundering upon the deck, with the long topmast in its company. Such a catastrophe would surely prove fatal to the ship and all knew it.

But while all hands were gazing at this, another danger arose. The low, rumbling that had been growing in the southward, had escaped the notice of the crew, and ere they knew it, the rushing, howling wind was upon them. The ship leaped like a frightened stag, before the gale. The mate cut the maintop sail sheets, and the sail was snapped into ribbons. The foretopmast was clewed up and the ship was got before the gale.

The lightning cloud was swept away and it was dark as Erebus. The wind howled fearfully but there was one sound more fearful than that. It was the creaking of the shattered trestletrees, as the fid of top-mast broke down upon them.

"O God!" ejaculated Captain Jacobs, "if the trestletrees give way we are lost! Hark! hear them labor!"

Away up loft in the impenetrable darkness, stood the giant topmast, and all felt that it could not stand there long. The men crowded aft, and with painfully beating hearts they heard the mast labor.

"If we could bring the ship broadside to, said the mate, the weather rigging might be cut, and the mast would go overboard."

"True—true," returned the Captain "but who shall go aloft to do the job? There will be no foot-hold in the top, for that would go with a crash. The trestletrees are already shattered."

"If you will port the helm, I will make the trial," cried a strong clear voice, which was at once recognized as Caleb Baker's.

"It will be sure death," said Jacobs.

"Then let it be so," returned Caleb. If I succeed, the rest of you may be saved, but now we are all in danger. Port the helm and I will go."

Caleb took the axe from the mizen mast, and soon his form was lost in the darkness, as he moved towards the starboard rigging. The helm was put a-port, and the ship gradually gave her starboard-side to the gale. Soon the blow of an axe was heard—then another—and another. The ship rolled heavily over, then another blow was heard. Then came a fearful straining and cracking—and then came the crash. The heavy topmast had gone over the side.

Fragments of the trestle and cross trees came rattling on the deck, but all eyes were strained towards the mast head. The dim outlines of the heroic man could be seen safely hanging by the mizen topmast stay.

The ship was once more got before the wind, and ere long Baker came safely upon deck. He staggered aft, to the binnacle, and there he sank, fainting and bruised, upon the deck; but he was quickly conveyed to the cabin, and his wants were all met.

Caleb's bruises were none of them bad, and in a few days he was again at his duty. The men eyed him anxiously as they met his smiles. The captain too changed color when he met the kind, noble look of the young man, but he soon overcame the false pride that actuated him, and stepped to the noble fellow's side, he took him by the hand.

"Caleb," said he, "if I have done wrong, I freely ask you to forgive me. I called you a coward, but I did not know you."

"Think no more of it," said Caleb, with a beaming eye. "I once made a promise to one whom I love better than life—my mother—that I would never do a deed of which I might afterwards be ashamed."

Bunkton pressed forward. "Caleb," said he, "seizing the hand of the young man in his hard fist, 'you must forgive me for what's passed. We'll be friends after this.'"

"Bless you, Bunkton, and friends we will be, returned Caleb."

"Yes," added Bunkton, "if you won't fight for yourself, I'll fight for you, if you stand in need of it."

"I tell you, my men," said the captain, "there's certainly two kinds of courage, and I don't know but that Caleb Baker's kind is the best. It takes a stronger and bigger bosom to hold it at all events."

Purity.

"Man is known by the company he keeps," says the adage—meaning, if it means anything, that while purity is refining and elevating, grossness is contaminating and degrading—both make their mark upon man. If you go among the dirt and dust, you will soil your person; if you go among immorality, you will corrupt your soul—and the more refined and susceptible you are in body and soul, the more will you suffer—as the brightest surface is dimmed by a breath, and the finest polish is marred by the slightest touch.

Now, let us reflect a moment on the amount of grossness with which we are constantly surrounded. Look at the thousands born and brought up around us in filth and ignorance and consider what a vast influence they must have over everything and everybody. Are we not contaminated by their presence, despite all our efforts in our little narrow self-circle? Where did you get those slang phrases you so frequently indulge in, and in which you are imitated by your children? Where did your little boy learn to swear and fight? Did you teach it to him? Ah! he learned his naughty tricks and vile language in the streets! Well, he is not the only respectable boy who has imitated the ugly, blustering, fighting urchins, who were born in damp, dark cellars or dingy garrets, where swathed in rags, nourished with filthy rottenness, and have grown up unchecked, amidst 'ignorance and gross beastliness.' Their parents were the victims of want, crime and shame, and you cannot expect the children under such circumstances, to be any better than they are—to be otherwise than gross in every sense. They have their influence even over you—you cannot go among them without acquiring some of these base ideas—without your soul's taking in some of their grossness—and how much more is this the case with your children? And these gross creatures have a voice in making the laws of the land, and a portion of their grossness is necessarily infused into the laws which you and your children must obey.

The gross politician bids for the votes of the gross, is elected, and proves true to his constituents. They infuse their grossness into all the social institutions, as well as into the political ones, and into the individual. The intellect of the community is darkened, its purity is tarnished, its morals are corrupted, its strength is taken away, its harmony is disturbed, its happiness is diminished by the grossness of these poor abject creatures. Physical and moral pestilences reign in the midst of the community; cheating and lying and stealing, and murder are every day occurrences. Disease and crime are as familiar as night—and will be, so long as this grossness is allowed to remain.

Now, then, it is a vital and religious duty which you owe, not only to the gross, to your children and to the community, but to yourself as you ever hope to enjoy yourself here or hereafter, to do all in your power to purify everything and everybody around you, that you may yourself be pure. Self-love should impel you to do your share to cleanse every filthy, disease-engendering spot, to provide clean and well ventilated apartments for the poor, to reform the dissolute, to awaken the ambition of the bowed and heart-broken, to arouse the pride and energy of the indolent, to heal the sick, to educate and enlighten the ignorant, and to remove the grossness and darkness everywhere. Not a stone should be left unturned—not a spot should be left unpurified, not a want should be left unsupplied, not a disease should be left unhealed, not a heart should be left unconsolated, not a tear should be left undried, not a mind should be left unenlightened. All this should be done out of sheer self-love, if from no more generous feeling. The really good man—the purer man—delights in doing these same things because of the happiness he confers on others, feeling truly that there is more pleasure in giving than receiving.

Sharks and their Ferocity.

The white shark cannot be said to be very common on the American coast; vessels, in approaching the land, occasionally discover one of these huge devourers, gently gliding through the water, in the wake of the rudder. Usually the color is a light ash, hence its name, though it is by no means always of that shade. On the back, as with nearly all fishes, the skin is quite dark; the tail has three lobes, teeth exceedingly numerous, and the body, when fully grown, from twenty to thirty feet long. In tropical climates, however, it attains its greatest size. Fossil teeth of a shark, to which family the one under consideration belongs, are found at Malta, measuring four and a half inches from the point to the base, and six inches from the point to the angle. All the fossil bones of the antediluvian races, which have been discovered, show that the primitive animals were of far greater magnitude than those of the present time. Perhaps there is no subject of deeper interest to the naturalist, than this curious fact, sustained by the exhibition of entire skeletons, in the cabinets of this country and Europe. These prove, conclusively, that those which preceded the present occupants of the soil were truly gigantic. The perfect bones of a lizard, sixty feet long; the teeth, skulls and vertebrae of the mastodon, as well as some others, will ever remain objects of wonder and astonishment. Were those moving mountains of flesh proportioned to the products of the earth? and if so, and they were permitted to roam over the globe, what physical change in the constitution of the world rendered it necessary to drive entire species utterly from existence, by a sudden and terrible desolation? At the pearl fisheries of South America, where white sharks are numerous, visiting the mighty caverns in the rocks, the water being so clear that a small object may be seen at considerable distance, the divers, familiar with the character of the monsters, in their descents for the oyster, are obliged to go armed in self-defence. For this purpose some carry a long sharp knife. As the shark's mouth is placed somewhat under the head, he endeavors to get over his intended victim, and if he discovers no disposition in the Indian to move, gently settles down over him with his horrible mouth widely extended. With the coolness of a philosopher, the instant he is near enough to be reached, the diver plunges the knife into his vitals. Another method which is practiced, is for the diver to carry down with him four or five hard wood sticks, about two feet long, sharpened at both ends. In case he is likely to be disturbed in his search for the oyster, by the visit of this king of sharks, he thrusts one of the sticks between his jaws, as he is in the act of closing them. This props them asunder, and the force with which they are brought to act on the stick, securely pins both ends into the bones, and away he goes, without the possibility of a remedy. Instances have been known of an Indian, who was so sharply set upon that he gave away three sticks in succession, before quitting his dangerous post.

A young girl, a native of the Marquesas Islands, contrived to steal a bar of iron from the deck of a Boston vessel, waiting for a cargo of sandal wood. She swam under the water for a considerable distance before coming up for breath, but the moment she was seen with the bar on her shoulder she was pursued, and just as the man in the bow raised his oar to strike her, she plunged a second time—the boats pursued the track, but when she again rose to the surface, still holding to the iron, a "mighty white shark" swallowed her at one effort.—History of the Shark.

Habits of the Wasp.

The subtleties resorted to by animals in search of food, have been regarded by the general reader as the most interesting and instructive portion of the works of naturalists. An incident illustrative of the wasp was recently related to us by an observing gentleman.

A blue wasp, known as the solitary wasp, because it lives alone in its little clay nest, was seen to whirl itself upon the strong, wheel-shaped web of a large spider. Here it set up a loud buzzing, like that of a fly when accidentally entangled in a similar web. The spider, watching at the door of his silken domain, stole cautiously forth. His advance was slow, for he evidently felt that he was approaching no common enemy. The apparently desperate, yet fruitless, efforts of the wasp to free himself, encouraged the spider and lured him forward. But when within some three inches of his intended victim, the wasp suddenly freed himself from his mock entanglements, and darting upon the poor spider, in a moment, as it were, pierced him with his deadly sting in a hundred places.

The wasp here his ill-gotten spoil to his lonely home. This home is built of clay, thimble-shaped, and originally containing but one apartment. In the lower part of this cul de sac, the wasp deposits its eggs. Immediately over them it draws a thin glutinous curtain. Upon this curtain it picks away the proceeds of its hunting excursions, such as spiders, flies, and all other insects which it regards as suitable food for its young. Consequently, when the young escape from the ova, they find above them a well stocked larder, and gradually eat their way through the choice depository, finally appearing to the delighted world in the agreeable form and stature of perfect wasps.

—Elder News Letter.

Young Men Wanted.

"WANTED—A young man of industry, ability and integrity," &c.

This meets our eye daily in the column of 'Wants,' and it is true as the Pentecost. Wanted? Of course they are always wanted. The market can never be overstocked; they will always be called for and never be quoted 'dull' or 'no sale.' Wanted for thinkers—wanted for workers—in the mart, on the main, in the field, and in the forest. Tools are lying idle for want of a young man; a pen is waiting to be nibbed, a tree to be felled, a school to be instructed.

They talk about staples and great staples. Honest, industrious, able young men are the great staples in this world of ours.

Young men! you are wanted, but not for a doctor. No, nor a lawyer. There are enough of them for this generation, and one or two to spare. Don't study a 'profession,' unless it be the profession of a bricklayer or farmer, or some other of the manual professions. Don't measure tape if you can help it. It's honest and honorable, and all that, but don't rob the women. It's their prerogative to handle silks and laces, tape and thread. Put on your hat then, like a man, don an apron and go out of doors. Get a good glow on your cheek, the jewelry of toil upon your brow, and a good set of well developed muscles. We would go if we could; but we were young longer ago than we would like to think: but you know when one's old he can't.

Besides, if you become a doctor, you'll have to wait—"Because you haven't experience," says an old practitioner: "because you are too young," says all the women. If you are a lawyer, and likely to rise, they'll put a weight on your head, a la Swiss, to keep you under; or, if you make a good argument, some opponent, as gray as a cat, will kick it over, by some taunt or other, because you was not born in the year one. And it will go, until you are tired and soured, and wish you had been a thinker, perhaps 'an immortal' one, or anything but what you are.

Be a farmer, and your troubles are over, or rather they don't begin. You own what you stand on from the centre of the earth, as they used to say, up to the sky; you are independent all day, and tired, not weary, at night. The more neighbors you have, and the better farmers they are, the more and the better for you.

There's one thing more, young man. You are wanted. A young woman wants you. Don't wait to be rich. If you do, ten to one if you are fit to be married at all, you will not find any body that's fit to be married. Marry while you are young, and struggle together, lest in the years to come, somebody shall advertise Young Men Wanted, and none to be had."—N. Y. Tribune.

Don't Despise your Business.

"No man of sense," it has been observed, 'despises his bread and butter.' It is only the weak who are ashamed of laboring for a livelihood, or who effect to scorn the branch of business which they especially pursue.

The first duty which every man owes to himself, to his family, and to his fellow-citizens is not to become a burden, particularly to society. That commonwealth also is the most flourishing in which the proportion of drones is the fewest: indeed, the idea of a perfect state involves the necessity of every member of it being a producer. Hence it is that work is always honorable. The most ordinary handicraft employment is as worthy, if exercised honestly, as the profession of law or medicine. Each citizen should follow that avocation for which he is best suited, and when he does this he fulfills the law of his existence; but never otherwise. A bad lawyer is less respectable than a good mechanic, and an able doctor is more meritorious than an honest laborer. To do one's duty, in the walk where one can be most efficient, is to be honorable; to neglect it, or to seek some other walk, is to become really disgraced. By this standard, and this only we should judge of men's respectability. It is time that we republicans banished the arbitrary lines of caste, as applied to the pursuits of life, which are derived from feudal Europe.

Yet there are thousands of men who are at heart ashamed of their business. Are they retail vendors? They scorn continuing to make money in their old way, and long to embark in the wholesale line. Are they jobbers? They think if they could only be shippers that their glory would culminate. Are they mechanics? They regret they are not lawyers. Are they farmers? They think to be in business in town. Such persons, in their hearts, worship absurd distinctions inherited from the social life of England, and regard the physician, the politician, or the banker, as really greater men than human clay. These are what Thackeray calls snobs; men of pretence and weak folly; men who despise their own bread and butter. The wise man, on the contrary, seeks independence by steadily attending to his business, well aware that an independence, honestly acquired, is his best claim to esteem. It is young men, or rather lads, that are oftenest victims to this weakness. Tens of thousands have been shipwrecked in life from having chosen a pursuit unsuitable to them, tempted thereto by false notions of the vulgarity of a trade, and the superior dignity of commerce or a profession."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Dark Days.

In the year 358, before the earthquake of Nicomedia, the darkness was very dense from two to three hours. Two years afterwards, in all the provinces of the Roman Empire, there was obscurity from early dawn to noon. The stars were visible; and its duration precludes the idea of a solar eclipse. At the return of light, the sun appeared first in a crescent form, then half its face was seen, and was gradually restored to its whole visible disc. In 469, the stars were seen by day at Rome. About 536, the sun was obscured for fourteen months, so that very little of his light was seen. In 557, such darkness prevailed from 3 P. M. till night that nothing could be seen. In 636, half the sun's disc was obscured for eight months. In 733, he was again darkened, and people were generally terrified.

In 934, Portugal was in darkness for two months, the sun having lost its brightness. The heavens were then opened in fissures by strong flashes of lightning, when there was suddenly bright sunlight. September 21, 1094, the sun was darkened for three hours. February 28, 1206, for six hours complete darkness turned the day into night. In 1241, on Michaelmas Day, the stars were visible at 3 P. M. In 1647, April 23-25, three days, the sun was so obscured that many stars were visible at once. Thus says Humboldt in Cosmos.

If we come almost to our own time, to May 19, 1790, history and tradition assert the occurrence of a remarkable day prevailing over New England at least, and considerably in some other places. It comes on between 10 and 11 A. M., and continued until midnight, growing gradually darker and darker, even till 11 at night. Candles and lamps were lighted for the people to see to dine, and to perform work about the house. These be-

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

Saturday, September 23d, 1854.

"BORN TO NO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE."

To READERS. The favors of advertisers and correspondents occupy much of the space in to-day's paper, which must account for the lack of the usual amount of reading matter of a news character.

QUINCY LYCEUM. At the annual meeting of this Institution, on Wednesday evening last, the following gentlemen were elected its officers for the ensuing year, viz:—
President—Edward Avery.
Vice President—Francis M. Johnson.
Secretary—John B. Bass.
Treasurer—Albert Thompson.
Caretakers—James White, Stephen Morse, Jr., Benjamin Bass.

DEFERRED.—The favor of "Boston" and the request to publish "Spirit Rappings," with others, we are obliged to defer until next week on account of the press of advertisements.

CLAM CHOWDER. Mr. French, of the Granite Saloon, will accommodate his numerous patrons to a dinner or supper of his celebrated chowder, this day, served up in his usual style, which we know to be A 1.

AMERICAN FLOUR. This article is cheaper in Europe than it is here. At Havre, the highest quotations for American flour were $8 50 a barrel, and poor qualities could not be sold in the market at all. At London, American flour of fine quality was in demand at $7 25 to $8 25 a barrel, while inferior sorts were altogether unsaleable.

MILD WINTER. It will be a pleasing item to those who like warm weather to learn that the weatherwise in the British Provinces, from well known signals, predict that the approaching winter is to be very mild.

NEW YORK WHIG CONVENTION. This body met at Syracuse on the 20th inst., Myron H. Clark of Ontario County, was nominated for Governor, and Henry J. Raymond of New York, for Lieut. Governor. Mr. Raymond is the Editor of the New York Times, and was a few years since Speaker of the Assembly.

MAIL ARRANGEMENTS. The President of the Old Colony and Fall River Railroad, is making speedy arrangements for the transmission of the mail from Boston to Braintree and Plymouth. This arrangement will soon be completed, when, as heretofore, the citizens of Quincy will receive two mails daily, and a Mail Agent will accompany the mail.

AGRICULTURAL EXHIBITION AND CATTLE SHOW. In our advertising columns will be found the announcement of the Sixth Annual Exhibition of the Norfolk County Agricultural Society, which will be held at Dedham, on the 26th and 27th of the present month (next week).

The exhibitions of this Society have always been excellent and worthy of a visit. For the arrangements of the occasion, we refer our readers to the advertisement.

GOOD SELECTION. George Haven, Esq., who was for several years the efficient Superintendent of the Fall River Railroad, has just been appointed Superintendent under the new arrangement, and accepts the trust much to the gratification of the travelling public.

EXCHANGE SALOON. In a late number of the Dorchester Chronicle, edited by Dr. O. P. Bacon, a writer familiarly known to our readers several years ago, by his articles on Temperance and Common Schools, we find the annexed paragraph relative to this popular place of entertainment and a just notice of its gentlemanly proprietor, and efficient and agreeable superintendent who is a resident of this town. Men of business will here find every facilities, such as blanks, checks, notes and paper, for their accommodation, a desideratum much needed in the vicinity of State Street. But to the sage Dr.'s notice.

A PLEASANT PLACE. The Exchange Saloon, No. 15 Devonshire street, Boston, opposite the old Exchange Coffee House, kept by two as agreeable, enterprising and accommodating, courteous and attentive young men as can be found in the great city of Boston—Messrs. Charles O. Conant and Joseph T. French. Their room is airy and pleasant, their soda cool as the underware of a winter's midnight; and all their refreshments No. 1 place.

POLITICAL. A convention of the National Democrats (old hunkers) of this State, is to be held in Boston on the 11th of October. Equal time will be given to all parties.

PROGRESS AND PREJUDICE. We have received from the enterprising publishers the above entitled new work. Mrs. Gore is an English authoress of extensive reputation in her own country, and has attained considerable popularity with the American people. She has in this book given us a delightful story, told in a graceful and elegant style. The characters are naturally drawn and therefore do not startle us by any undue height of coloring which is the chief failing of many modern novels. The book has all the elements of popularity and will undoubtedly add to the reputation which is already attached to the authoress' name in this country.

Published by Dewitt & Davenport, 160 and 162 Nassau Street, New York City.

GODEY'S LADY'S BOOK, for October, has for frontispiece a very pretty and life-like engraving of "Crossing the Brook," a good engraving entitled "Sports of Youth," the usual fashion plates, three designs for floral head dresses, a number of embroidery patterns for both useful and ornamental articles, patterns for beads and other works, a design for bridal glove box, etc. Course of lessons in Drawing which will interest the young pupil in this art, a view of the octagonal country seat of O. S. Fowler, the distinguished phenologist, with the plan of the first story and a description of the building. This is quite a unique affair both in shape and material. Its walls are composed of simply lime, coarse sand or gravel, and broken stones, large and small of all possible shapes and sizes, just as they came from the slate stone quarry, in digging its foundation. We find in this number some drawings of shoes for ladies and children from the extensive establishment of Edwin A. Brooks, 575 Broadway, and 150 Fulton Streets, New York City, which, a friend at our elbow suggests is an "institution" deserving of patronage and one which he can recommend. Mr. Brooks makes and has for sale every description of foot gear from a lady's satin slipper to a gold digger's boot.

The leading article of the number is a valuable and interesting paper on the Diamond and its uses illustrated with numerous cuts. The number is rich in stories, tales, poems, etc. There is one department of this magazine to which there seems to be much attention paid, and that is the articles in Household Economy and recipes for cooking Confectionary Desserts; the Toilet, and for the Sick Room, and Nursery; Godey is chiefly edited by Mrs. Sarah J. Hale, a lady of extensive literary acquirements and reputation, as well as most excellent taste and judgment.

For the Patriot.

Quincy Lyceum.

MR. EDITOR:—The members of this Society held their annual meeting on Wednesday evening last, and elected officers for the ensuing year. The public will expect from the new board as good a course of lectures as we had last season.

Among the members present I observed "Lishnahago," so well and favorably known to your readers. The members showed their appreciation of his wit and ability, by pressing him into their service, thus securing at least one efficient officer for this year. "L" bore his blushing honors meekly enough, and seemed as if he was "to the manner born." It is expected that he will hold his office during the full term for which he is elected. It seems too bad for an officer to resign at the exact time when the most work is to be done. The readers of the "Patriot" will miss his weekly criticism, which many of them thought more instructive than some of the lectures. I hope he will appoint a successor who will fill his place for the ensuing season. P. S.

THE CROPS. Accounts from all quarters indicate that the crops are coming in well, and that the damage by the drought is much less than was first anticipated. This is good news, and we hope to experience the beneficial effects of it in this quarter ere long.

Special Notices.

A meeting of the Adams Literary Association will take place at their Hall, on MONDAY EVENING next, at 8 o'clock. At the last meeting of the Association, it was voted to hold their Annual Levee on the 1st of December. A full attendance is requested at the next meeting, to make choice of Committees. J. JAMESON, President. WILLIAM BAXTER, Secretary.

Deaths.

In this town, on the 15th inst., George H. son of Mr. Francis and Mrs. Jane Wilson, aged 2 months.

On the 16th inst., Emeline Curtis, daughter of Mr. Daniel and Mrs. Abigail Baxter, aged 3 years, 7 months and 28 days.

On the 21st inst., Emma Isadore, daughter of Mr. Theodore W. and Mrs. Calantha Fowle, aged 1 year and 1 month.

In Dorchester, on the 17th inst., Mr. Darius Brewer, aged 69.

Born into the higher life, Sept. 11th, Dr. James B. Fiske of Bangor, (Me.) aged 70.

"In the midst of life we are in death."

Never were the above words so powerfully impressed upon our mind, as when the intelligence was imparted to us of the sudden departure of him, whose decease this notice records. But a few days before his spirit winged its flight to the regions of eternal bliss, he was here on a visit to a beloved sister, and went with her, and other friends, on a short trip to Newport, R. I. Though far advanced in years, he enjoyed his accustomed good health, and hoped again to visit the friends he loved so well.

But he has been called home to a higher stage of action in the Progressive Spheres above, to labor and co-operate, with the purified spirits of heaven in their work of love. While here he became a firm believer in the truths of the Harmonical Philosophy, and derived much pleasure and happiness in the spirit communion of the loved ones gone before.

He was a good man and a true Christian, and has gone home to meet the rich reward of the good deeds done in the body. Shall I not say to the friends,—

"O! mourn not for the loved one fled
To realms more pure, a home more fair,
And call not the departed dead,
He lives, he loves, he waits you there?"

Squashes Stolen.

TAKEN from the Gardens in the Furnace Meadow, on Friday night, Sept. 15th, five large Marrow Squashes. The largest was estimated to weigh about forty-five pounds, and one marrow, like the one shown in the New England Farmer of May 27th, 1854. It was cut from the vine obliquely, about the centre of the stem, giving a cleft of an oval form, the longest diameter being 2 1/4 inches.

The smallest of the Squashes was estimated to weigh nearly thirty pounds, was lemon shaped, and was also cut from the vine. Each of the other three were of the same shape, and were estimated to weigh more than thirty pounds. They were broken off, leaving a part of the stem. Foot-prints very distinct, of a boot of the size of No. 9, were found near the place where the squashes grew. It is inferred that they were taken by some loafer in order "to raise the wind," and that they will be offered for sale. As the true weight of each was five dollars will be given for the weight, well certified, to woever may have them, and no questions asked.

HOUSE LOTS.

S. R. & C. H. EDWARDS will sell at auction, on THURSDAY, Sept. 23, at 1 o'clock P. M., 37 House Lots, being all remaining unsold of over 100 lots laid out by them near their residence. Some of these lots are superior in all respects to any ever sold by them in this town, and all of them are well worthy the attention of any one wishing to build or to invest a few dollars where it will be safe, and sure of giving a good return. This is the last opportunity to purchase in this part of the town, as every lot belonging to them will be sold if one dollar is bid for each.

Terms of payment very liberal, and made known at the sale.

A Chalm Chowder will be served up on the premises immediately before the sale for those who attend.

TO THE AFFLICTED.
[From The New England Directory.]

THE great virtues of Botanical remedies
have, in all ages, been universally approved and acknowledged, but it remained for
the Chinese to discover a never-failing remedy, not only to cure disease, but to render the life young and blooming, and lengthen the days of man. Such are the benefits derived from the use of the celebrated "COMPOUND ESSENCE OF CHINA ROOT," prepared by Dr. F. MORRILL, No. 15 Howard street.

This invaluable article is composed of thirteen vegetable ingredients, and as we have tested its quality, we bear willing testimony to its small of the cure, also very low down the back, with heat and scalding of the water, with some affection of the liver, great weakness and prostration of strength, nervous debility, &c. Much exercise, walking, standing, riding or lifting, greatly increase the above symptoms. In advanced stages of the disease the sufferer is deprived of all exertion, and is obliged to be confined to the house, and frequently to his bed. These are the symptoms of this complaint, all of which can be radically cured by the use of this extraordinary medicine. Price $3 per package.

DR. SPEAR'S GOLDEN BITTERS.
This valuable and popular specific stands
unvalued for the cure of Female Weakness, Nervousness, Barrenness, Fluor Albus, &c.
For common cases of weakness in the stomach,
in male or female, they form an invaluable remedy. If these Bitters were appreciated as their virtues demand, they would find their way into every family. They are compounded especially for those complaints which often form the prelude to many others of a more serious character—such as excessive Nervousness, Prostration of Strength, Bloating of the Stomach, Dropsy, Consumption, Eripitation of the Heart, Scrophulous Cancer in the Womb, Pressing Down of the Bowels, &c. Price $1
per package, or six packages for $5.

E. D. SPEAR, the celebrated Indian Doctor,
No. 45 Kneeland Street, Boston, may be consulted at his office, or by letter, upon all diseases which afflict humanity, free of charge.
Dr. S. invites those who are pronounced incurable to consult him, as he believes that in many cases he will be able to restore them to health.

All letters strictly attended to, and answered promptly.

DR. IRA WARREN'S
COMPOUND OF
PURE COD LIVER OIL, LIME AND SUGAR OF MILK.

THE great value of Cod Liver Oil as a medicine in Consumption is now generally admitted. It promotes assimilation, the primary defect in the disease, by initiating the growth of cells—the cell resulting, according to Dr. Burnett, from the union of a minute particle of oil with albumen, under the quickening force of vitality. The PHOSPHATE
OF LIME has been proved to promote the same great end throughout both the vegetable
and the animal world.

The SUGAR OF MILK, manufactured
from the whey of goat's milk, being a supporter of respiration in weak lungs, and having a powerful affinity for oxygen, greatly aids
the above remedies in Consumption, and when properly combined with them, makes an effectual preparation, removing much of the offensive taste and smell of the oil, and supplying a saccharine constituent for the lungs, much like that elaborated by a healthy liver.

In conducting a large special practice in THROAT and LUNG DISEASES, I resort directly to the fisheries for a pure oil. The excellence of this combination will be at once appreciated by my professional brethren, and a trial of it will commend it to the people generally.

Norfolk Agricultural Society
Cattle Show.

THE Officers and Trustees of the Norfolk Agricultural Society announce to the public that their Sixth Annual Exhibition will take place at Dedham, on

TUESDAY and WEDNESDAY,
the 26th and 27th days of September.

This Society was formed and incorporated
"for the encouragement of Agriculture and Horticulture, Manufacturing and Mechanical Arts, in the County of Norfolk." In order to promote the important objects comprehended in its plan,
the Trustees deem it expedient and essential to
hold Annual Exhibitions, at which the products of Agricultural Science and Industry, Mechanical Skill and Ingenuity, may be displayed before the public. They believe that such exhibitions cannot fail to produce a generous and healthy rivalry in all the departments of useful industry,
stimulate exertion, encourage modest and deserving merit, elevate and reform the public taste, awaken to life and activity the improved talent,
ingenuity and skill, contribute to the increase
and diffusion of valuable knowledge, and, in short, tend generally to the cultivation, improvement, prosperity and happiness of the whole people.

They, therefore, respectfully invite the Agricultists, Horticulturists, Manufacturers, Me-chanists, and Artists of the County of Norfolk, to offer for exhibition and premium, at all time
and place above mentioned, the products of their labor, skill, ingenuity and taste in all the departments of useful and ornamental industry, such as Boots, Shoes, Carriages, Manufactures of Straw, Wood, Metal, Wool, Cotton, Flax, &c.

Two Dollars per annum in advance, delivered until the end of the year, then Ten Dollars will be required. No subscription without advertisement of all ages, unless at the option of the publisher. Advertisements accepted, and compensation for the use of the press, and will be for until ordered out. The privilege of annual advertisements is limited to one insertion only. Letters and communications, postage paid, receive early attention.

The following gentlemen are authorized to receive pay and requested to procure subscribers: RAILROAD VILLAGE, WEST DISTRICT, MILTON, DORCHESTER, WYOMOUTH, ALBINGTON, NEW BEDFORD, NEW YORK CITY, BROOKLYN, (N. Y.)

Miscellaneous.

For the Patriot.

Wool-Pulling Extraordinary. The great body of the American people are right at heart upon the subject of universal liberty, but are too much influenced by the sophistry of political demagogues to see the right. The old established political parties, whose interest it makes the northern and southern wings of parties pull together at the right time, received into families year after year, they are looked upon as guiding stars instead of jack-o'-lanterns, as they are, leading to cut up the most ridiculous Somersetshire didoes.

A constant reader of the Boston Post gives everybody an old foggy that don't think of the brilliant achievements of President Pierce's administration such as smarting up to Spain, bombard Greytown, establishing popular sovereignty in the Kansas and Nebraska territories, divers other acts indicative of pluck, claims to be a Jeffersonian Democrat, and lies that all men are born free and endowed with certain inalienable rights among which are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. He has a great regard for the bone and sinew of the country, and says the ought to rule not the white kid gentry, money, not corporations; nevertheless he always ready to do the dirty work of aristocratic slaveholders, and lend his aid to oppress the weak and the defenceless.

A constant reader of the Whig journal says he is not a turn coat, but sticks to principle, which means he sticks to his party however often it changes its principles.

Some time since my Whig friend (his party being out of power) declared in a solemn and emphatic manner, that if Texas was annexed, the Union ought to be, and would be dissolved. Texas was annexed. At a late date, my friend still being among the "outs," declared that the Whig party was the only real free-soil party;—the only party to which the friends of freedom could look with confidence for a determined, uncompromising resistance to slave power. Still later, my friend being among the "ins," sang halloo to the Fugitive Slave Law, and denounced men as traitors who would not join in a demoniac howl of exultation at the passage of an act that makes our very New England a hunting ground for fugitive slaves, and imposes a penalty upon those who shall obstruct the higher law, feed the hungry, clothe the naked, and let the oppressed go free. My friend loved the Union then excessively; said he imbibed a love for the glorious Union with his mother's milk, and consented to perform the office of certain four-footed beasts who are trained to assist in re-enslaving men that the Union might be preserved. He declared that the vexed question of slavery was settled under President Fillmore's administration, and pledged himself to discountenance all agitation upon that subject.

At the present time, my friend being among the "outs," is a Liberty man again, and again claims that the Whig party is the only liberty party. He is astounded at the atrocious acts committed and meditated by Pierce & Co., such as preparing the way for the extension of the cage of slavery over the territory dedicated by God, and by the emanation of his laws dedicated by man to freedom, breaking solemn compacts, destroying a defenseless town without provocation, endeavoring to provoke a war with Spain, as to have an excuse to seize Cuba, and raising the "old Nick" generally. Neither my friends are naturally depraved, but unfortunately both were learned, when young, to be led by the nose and to follow their leaders without a why or a wherefore. It is true that the sudden right about face movements

Opinions of the Boston Press.
"The long experience and correct taste of Dr. Stocking, of this city, eminently qualify him to set artificial teeth, that look well, feel well, wear well, and work well; and, what is rather remarkable, he seems to be better pleased with furnishing good work than with exorbitant prices for it,—a trait not common with the profession."—Evening Traveller.

"We advise all toothless persons to call on Dr. Stocking of this city, and procure some artificial teeth of his manufacture. We offer this advice with the more confidence, because whatever he undertakes to do, he does well. No one who is acquainted with him can doubt that Nature designed him for a dentist of the right stamp."—Morning Post.

"No Dentist among us is better qualified to improve the condition of the mouth, by setting, filling, extracting, cleansing, regulating, &c. of the teeth, than Dr. Stocking of this city. His reputation for dental skill is too well established to be doubted."—Evening Traveller.

"Dr. Stocking of this city, possesses the right qualifications for his profession;—requiring, as it does, a combination of patience, care, skill and gentleness, with a thorough knowledge of all the intricacies of the business."—Boston Journal.

If any of our readers have got the tooth-ache, and wish to know who can extract it with the least pain, we should say, Dr. Stocking; or, if they want their teeth filled, and filled right, we should say, by all means go to Dr. Stocking. And, above all, if you wish for artificial teeth that every body calls the perfection of art, he is the one to furnish them, and at a reasonable price."—Daily Times.

THE HYDROGEN,

WATER-PROOF, ANTI-CONSUMPTIVE
CORK SOLES, MANUFACTURED BY
HARCOURT, BRADLEY & CO.,
41 Market Street, Manchester.

Principal Warehouse, 102 Wood Street, Cheap-side, London, England. American Establishments, 38 Ann Street and 102 Nassau Street, New York, U. S.

THE Hydrogen is a valuable discovery for protecting the feet from damp or cold, and is a preventive of many Lung diseases, without any doctoring whatever. The Hydrogen is in the form of a sole, and worn inside the boot or shoe. Its medicated character is a powerful antidote to disease.

For Gentlemen it will be found agreeable, warm, and healthy, to wear in the coldest or rainiest weather, as the foot cannot become wet if the Hydrogen is inserted. Ladies may wear the lightest soled boots or shoes in the most inclement weather with impunity; while Consumption, so prevalent among the young of our country, may be thwarted by their general adoption. They entirely supersede overshoes, as the latter cause the feet to perspire in a very unhealthy manner; and, besides, are not dangerous wear to pedestrians in icy weather, like india rubbers. While the latter cause the feet to appear extremely large, the Hydrogen, being a mere thin slice of cork prepared, peculiarly placed inside, does not increase the size of the foot, or cause the foot to appear untidy.

To children they are extremely valuable, as they engage in exercise with comfort and healthy effects. Their expense is so slight as to scarcely need mention; besides, those who patronize them will find their yearly doctor's bills much diminished thereby.

As the Hydrogen is becoming more known, its sale is increasing to an almost incredible extent. Last year in London, Manchester, Birmingham, Liverpool, Glasgow, Leeds, Dublin, Paris, Antwerp, Hamburg, and Berlin, our sales reached 1,732,450 pairs of Cork Soles. This year the number will far surpass that.

Ask the Faculty their opinion of its value as a preventive for COUGHS, COLDS, BRONCHITIS, ASTHMA AND CONSUMPTION.

MEN'S SIZE, per pair, 35 cents.

THE CHEST.
Sir Astley Cooper, Bart., M. D.,
THE EMINENT MEDICAL PRACTITIONER, HAS LEFT A VALUABLE LEGACY TO THE WORLD IN HIS GREAT Preventative of Consumption.

Unfailing Cure for Pulmonary Diseases, Without the use of Medicine.
SIR A. C. Bart., invented and advised the use of the MEDICATED FUR CHEST PROTECTOR. To all persons of all ages and conditions, as a certain and safe shield against those fearful diseases, Consumption, Bronchitis, Asthma, Coughs, Colds, and other affections of the Lungs, which arise from the exposed state of the chest, according to fashion, and the continual changes of our climate.

"The Protector" is simply a chemically prepared fur, lined with silk and padded, which, suspended from the neck, covers the chest in so agreeable a manner that, once worn, it becomes a necessity and a comfort.

"The Protector," although but recently introduced into America, is making rapid progress through the United States, the Canadas, South America and the West Indies. It has for a long time been a staple article in England and on the continent of Europe, while it has grown in many countries to the position of an article of dress.

To demonstrate these facts enquire of any English resident in your vicinity of his knowledge of the beneficial effects of wearing the Protector, without recourse to doctoring of any kind. The cost of wearing these articles is a mere trifle, and one will last some years. No one who values the health of himself or his family will be without them. The Hospitals in this country are not alone recommending them, but rapidly introducing them. Harcourt, Bradley & Co. of London, and Manchester, England, were originally entrusted with the manufacture of the Protectors, by the lamented Dr. Cooper, and continue manufacture according to his original instructions, and therefore recommend those who would wear "The Protectors," to see to their being genuine.

REMEMBER THIS IS A STAPLE ARTICLE, AND NO PATENT MEDICINE.

Miscellaneous.

For the Patriot.

Wool-Pulling Extraordinary.

The great body of the American people are right at heart upon the subject of universal liberty, but are too much influenced by the sophistry of political demagogues and a corrupt press, to act right. The old established political parties, whose interest it is to make the northern and southern wings of the parties pull together at the right time, are received into families year after year, until they are looked upon as guiding stars instead of jack o' lanterns, as they are, leading men to cut up the most ridiculous somersets and diodes.

A constant reader of the Boston Post imagines everybody an old Fog that don't flap their flippers and crow at the brilliant achievements of President Pierce's administration—such as smarting up to Spain, bombarding Greytown, establishing popular sovereignty in the Kansas and Nebraska territories, and divers other acts indicative of pluck. He claims to be a Jeffersonian Democrat, and believes that all men are born free and equal, endowed with certain inalienable rights, among which are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. He has a great regard for the bone and sinew of the country, and says they ought to rule not the white kid gentry, nor money, nor corporations—nevertheless he is always ready to do the dirty work of aristocratic slaveholders, and lend his aid to oppress the weak and the defenceless.

A constant reader of the Whig journals says he is not a turn coat, but sticks to principle, which means he sticks to his party, however often it changes its principles.

Some time since my Whig friend (his party being out of power) declared in a solemn and emphatic manner, that if Texas was annexed, the Union ought to be, and would be, dissolved. Texas was annexed. At a later date, my friend still being among the "outs," declared that the Whig party was the only real free-soil party;—the only party to whom the friends of freedom could look with confidence for a determined, uncompromising resistance to slave power. Still later, my friend being among the "ins," sang hallelujahs to the Fugitive Slave Law, and denounced men as traitors who would not join in the demoniac howl of exultation at the passage of an act that makes our very New England a hunting ground for fugitive slaves, and imposes a penalty upon those who shall obey the higher law, feed the hungry, clothe the naked, and let the oppressed go free. My friend loved the Union then excessively; he said he imbibed a love for the glorious Union with his mother's milk, and consented to perform the office of certain four-footed beasts who are trained to assist in re-enslaving men that the Union might be preserved. He declared that the vexed question of slavery was settled under President Fillmore's administration, and pledged himself to discountenance all agitation upon that subject.

At the present time, my friend being among the "outs," is a Liberty man again, and again claims that the Whig party is the only Liberty party. He is astounded at the atrocious acts committed and meditated by Pierce & Co., such as preparing the way for the extension of the cause of slavery over territory dedicated by God, and by the re-enactment of his laws dedicated by man to freedom, breaking solemn compacts, destroying a defenceless town without provocation, endeavoring to provoke a war with Spain, so as to have an excuse to seize Cuba, and raising the "old Nick" generally. Neither of my friends are naturally depraved, but unfortunately both were learned, when young, to be led by the nose and to follow their leaders without a why or a wherefore. It is true that the sudden right about face movements sometimes rather confused our honest dupes, but the logic of great statesmen and the teachings of eloquent divines soon explained matters to their entire satisfaction, and gave them renewed confidence in the saving influence of their respective parties.

Both political parties are managed by southern slaveholders. Their agents north are the political dupe faces and the unscrupulous press. It is for them to say when the northern wing of either party shall shed crocodile tears for the slave, or help to crush all hope of liberty in his breast. Do wrong and outrage stir deeply the honest public heart, then word comes up from crafty politicians south—Swing, friends, swing with the multitude, pass anti-slavery resolutions as you have done before, blow us up as you have done before, then they won't bolt from the party, and by and by, when the excitement is over and the presidential election comes around, whip them into national Whigs and Democrats, as you have done before, so they will know no north, no south, no east, no west, but go it blind for a pro-slavery president on a pro-slavery platform.

Boston.

Business Endurance.

Men of genius without endurance cannot succeed. Men who start in one kind of business may find it impossible to continue therein all their days. Ill health may demand a change. New and wider fields of enterprise and success may be opened to them; new elements of character may be developed. Men may have a positive distaste for some pursuits, and success may demand a change. None of these cases fall within the general rule. Men may have rare talents, but if they "are everything by turns, and nothing long," they must not expect to prosper. No form of business is free from vexations; each man knows the spot on which his own harness chafes; but he cannot know how much his own neighbor suffers. It is said that a Yankee can splice a rope in many different ways; an English sailor knows but one method, but in that method he does his work well. Life is not long enough to allow any one to be really master of but one pursuit.

The history of eminent men in all professions and callings proves this. The great statesman Daniel Webster was a great lawyer. His boyhood was marked only by uncommon industry; as a speaker he did not excel in early life. With great deliberation he selected the law as his profession, nor could he be deterred from his chosen pursuit. While a poor student, not the tempting prize of fifteen hundred dollars a year as clerk of the courts, then a large sum, gained with great difficulty for him by the zeal and influence of his father, nor could all the persuasions of the father turn him from the mark he had set before him; and his great eulogist, the Attorney General of Massachusetts, is another marked illustration of resolute endurance and indomitable industry—a life long—centering in one profession, making him one of the chief ornaments of that profession, if not its head, in the United States.

Our late distinguished Ambassador at the Court of St. James, Hon. Abbott Lawrence, whose wealth is poured out for all benevolent purposes in donations large as the sea, can recall the time when he had his profession to select, and the first dollar of his splendid fortune to earn. He chose deliberately a calling; he pursued that occupation with integrity and endurance, through dark days and trying seasons, and the result is before the world. This case affords an apt illustration of the proverb of the wise man, that a man "diligent in his business shall stand before kings, and not before mean men."

The late John Jacob Astor, as he left his native Germany, passed beneath a lindentype not far from the line that separated his native land from another, and made three resolutions, which he intended should guide him through life:—1. He would be honest. 2. He would be industrious. 3. He would never gamble. He was on foot; his wealth was in the small bundle that swung from the stick laid on his shoulder. The world was before him. He was able to carry them out. His success is the best comment on his endurance.

Stephen Girard, at the age of forty years, was in quite moderate circumstances, being the captain of a small coasting vessel on the Delaware, and part owner of the same. No trait in his character was more marked than his endurance, and this element gave him a fortune.

All men who have succeeded well in life have been men of high resolve and endurance. The famed William Pitt was in early life fond of gambling; the passion increased with his years; he knew that he must at once master the passion or the passion would master him. He made a firm resolve that he would never again play at a game of hazard. He could make such a resolution, he could keep it. His subsequent eminence was the fruit of that power.

William Wilberforce, in his earlier days, like most young men of his rank and age, loved the excitement of places of hazard. He was one night persuaded to keep the faro-bank. He saw the ruin of the vice of gaming as he never saw it before; he was appalled at what he beheld. Sitting amid gaming, ruin, and despair, he took the resolution that he would never again enter a gaming house. He changed his company with the change of his conduct, and subsequently became one of the most distinguished Englishmen of his age.

Dr. Samuel Johnson was once requested to drink wine with a friend; the Doctor proposed tea. "But drink a little wine," said his host. "I cannot," was the reply; "I know abstinence—I know excess; but I know no medium. Long since, I resolved, as I could not drink a little wine, I would drink none at all." A man who could thus support his resolution by action was a man of endurance, and that element is as well displayed in this incident as in the compilation of his great work.

When Richard Brinsley Sheridan made his first speech in Parliament, it was regarded on all hands as a most mortifying failure. His friends urged him to abandon a Parliamentary career, and enter upon some field better suited to his ability. "No," said Sheridan—"no, it is in me, and it shall come out!" And it did, and he became one of the most splendid debaters in England.

Loyola, the founder of the order of Jesuits, the courtier, the man of gallantry and dissipation, obtained such mastery over himself by labor and endurance, that, to illustrate the fact, he stood several hours, apparently unmoved, in a pond of ice and muddy water, up to his chin. Perhaps no other nation in Europe, at that time, could have won the battle of Waterloo except the British, because no other could have brought to that conflict that amount of endurance needed to win. For many hours that army stood manfully before the murderous fire of the French; column after column fell, while not a gun was discharged on their part. One sullen word of command ran along the line as thousands fell—"File up! file up!" "Not yet—not yet!" was the Iron Duke's reply to earnest requests made to charge and fight the foe. At length the time of action came. The charge was given, and victory perched upon the standard of England.—Hunt's Merchants' Magazine.

Peppering 'Em.

"Did I ever tell you how near I came losing my election as Senator?" said the Squire. "No, I b'lieve not."

"Well, it was altogether owing to Water-tem's not having a sufficient supply of liquor on hand. You see the main strength of our party lies in the upper end of the corner—'specially among the inhabitants of the Swamp, as it is called. So you see, about two days before the election, I send Sam up to the Swampers with five gallons of the real hardware, tremendous stuff, knock a horse down, the last Water-tem had on hand. About four hours back came Sam, horse in perspiration, himself in fright, and everything indicating an untoward state of affairs."

"What's the matter, Sam?" said I.

"Matter?" said he, "matter enough, you have outraged the feelings of the virtuous Swampers, they swear that any man who expects to go to the Senate for three years, and can't afford ten gallons of whisky, is too mean for the post, they won't vote for him."

"Matters looked squally enough. Only one storekeeper within a day's ride, and he a Whig. Of course he wouldn't sell any liquor to me so near election."

"What did you do?"

"Called a council of war immediately," Lawyer Ross and several more. Ross proposed a letter of apology to the disaffected. Rejected, wouldn't do without the whisky. Cale Alright was the fellow to help us out, always full of expedients. He proposed to water the liquor up to the right quantity. We did so, but on trying it found it much too weak for our friends. Such wouldn't go down with them. Cale asked if we had any other spirits; handed him about a gallon of gin; in it went; tasted it; not strong enough. Found a quart of rum, poured it in. Sam tried it: "too weak," said he. We are at our wit's end. "Red pepper," said Cale. It was brought in; went a pound; he stirred it up. "Capital," said he. We tried it and nearly blistered our throats: it would have killed rats. Sam took it up the next day, explaining that it was owing to the scarcity of liquor in the neighborhood that a fresh supply of the best "Old Mongohale" had been obtained, and invited a trial of its merits. They mollified, pronounced it the "safe stuff," and I became senator by a majority of two hundred votes."

Literature of Commerce.

It is with great pleasure that we transfer to our columns the following letter to the editor of the Transcript, by our old friend, Freeman Hunt, Esq. Mr. Hunt has succeeded in his important undertaking in a manner which shows that he has a perfect right to feel proud of what he has accomplished. His pride is an honest and a manly one, and has its source in some of the best feelings of our nature. The Merchants' Magazine is one of the most valuable periodicals in the world, nor do we know of any one that can be compared with it, all things considered. Not Blackwood itself is more essentially the prince of literary magazines, or the Edinburgh the chief of quarterlies, than the Merchants' is at the head of the department of literature to which it belongs. It is the eclipse of that department. It is but the merest justice to Mr. Hunt to say, that to him alone do we owe the existence of the periodical with which his fame is indissolubly connected. We rejoice to know that his literary and business talents have met with their well deserved reward, not only in that solid shape which is always so acceptable, but also in their appreciation by an enlightened public.

The following is Mr. Hunt's letter, which we commend to the reader's attention:—

"MERCANTILE LITERATURE."

To the Editor of the Boston Transcript:

You published, in a recent number of your valuable journal, a brief article from the "Philadelphia Merchant," with the above caption, which contained, as you may recollect, an allusion to the "Merchants' Magazine." The editor of the "Merchant" is not perhaps aware that, prior to the establishment of my work in 1830, now more than fifteen years since, the term "Mercantile Literature," or "Literature of Commerce," had never been used in the application, which has since become so familiar to the general reader. When I started the magazine, it appeared to me that Commerce, more or less intimately connected as it is with all transactions and all pursuits in life, was deserving not only a name, but the possession of a literature, as much so at least as any other class of topics—that the term "Merchant" implied more than the mere buyer, seller, and exchanger of "goods, wares, merchandise," and money, and that to become a large and liberal merchant, required a greater variety and amount of information than had generally been considered necessary, or was embraced in that cognomen. The time has, in my opinion, gone by when men can blunder into fortunes, or succeed in trade, without a knowledge of the diversified operations and principles of commerce. There is scarcely a science or a branch of knowledge that may not be turned to a useful and profitable account in mercantile enterprise; and it will, I suppose, be readily admitted, that the study of mercantile and maritime law, the languages of commercial nations, geography, history, mineralogy, chemistry, political economy, &c., all go to make up the necessary accomplishments of the large merchant. The fact is, commerce must now be regarded as a liberal pursuit, and the merchants of the future will then become in reality the "kings of commerce."

Prior to the establishment of the Merchants' Magazine, there were at home and abroad, periodicals devoted to agriculture, the mechanic arts, law journals, medical reviews, in fine, almost every class and profession had a literature of its own, while commerce remained unrepresented, (except by the Price Currents, Shipping Lists and Daily Advertisers,) in this broad and varied field.

It was this condition of things that suggested to my mind the idea of a Commercial Literature, and the establishment of a Merchants' Magazine and Review, which must, I think, be regarded as the pioneer periodical devoted to that speciality, and the earliest movement looking to the concentration and embodiment of the literature of commerce. At all events, no similar work had ever before been published, and no work in existence at this time, contains so large an amount and variety of matter relating to the multifarious operations of trade and commerce.

May I not then claim the authorship of the expression I was first to apply to commerce, and which I have, for so many years, sedulously labored to realize and embody, in a permanent and durable form—that is, the Literature of Commerce.

With great regard, your friend and servant,

FREEMAN HUNT.

Power of Habit.

John B. Gough, in a lecture delivered at Exeter Hall, London, thus illustrates the power of habit. The report is from a London paper:

"I remember riding from Buffalo to the Niagara Falls, and said to a gentleman—

"What river is this, sir?"

"That," he said, "is Niagara river."

"Well, it is a beautiful stream," said I, "bright and fair and glassy; how far off are the rapids?"

"Only a mile or two," was the reply.

Is it possible that only a mile from us we shall find the water in the turbulence which it must show when near the Fall?"

"You will find it so, sir," and so I found it; and that first sight of Niagara I shall never forget. Now launch your bark on that Niagara river; it is bright, smooth, beautiful and glassy. There is a ripple at the bow; the silver wave you leave behind adds to your enjoyment. Down the stream you glide, oars, sails and helm in proper trim, and you set out on your pleasure excursion. Suddenly some one cries out from the bank,

"Young men, ahoy!"

"What is it?"

"The rapids are below you!"

"Ha! ha! we have heard of the rapids, but we are no such fools as to get there. If we go too fast, then we shall up the helm and steer to the shore; we will set the mast in the socket, hoist the sail, and speed to the land. Then on, boys; don't be alarmed—there is no danger."

"Young men, ahoy there!"

"What is it?"

"The rapids are below you!"

"Ha! ha! we will laugh and guff; all things delight us. What care we for the future? No man ever saw it. Sufficient for the day is the evil thereof. We will enjoy life while we may; will catch pleasure as it flies. This is enjoyment; time enough to steer out of danger when we are sailing swiftly with the current."

"Young men, ahoy!"

"What is it?"

"Beware! Beware! the rapids are below you!"

Now you see the water foaming all around. See how fast you pass that point! Up with the helm! Now turn! Pull hard! quick! quick! pull for your lives! Pull till the blood starts from the nostrils, and the veins stand like whip cords upon the brow! Set the mast in the socket! Hoist the sail! Ah! ah! it's too late! "Shrieking, creaking, howling, blaspheming—over they go!"

Thousands go over the rapids every year, through the power of evil habit, crying all the while, "when I find out that it is injuring me I will give it up!"

In concluding, the speaker warned young men, in very impressive language, that they could not, even by penitence, amendment and a long life of religion, wash out the stain of early dissipation, nor always banish the accusing spectres that would rise even in their holiest moments.

Courtship.

"Come—come," said Mrs. Grey, "you have been moping there long enough, nephew, forgetting manners and everything else. Here are the apples waiting, and no one to hand them round, for when I once get settled in this easy-chair"—here the good woman gave a smiling survey of her ample person, which certainly overflowed the chair at every point, leaving all but a ridge of the back and the curving arms quite invisible—"it isn't a very easy thing to get up again. Now bustle about; while we old women rest ourselves, you and Julia, there, can try your luck with the apple seeds."

"I remember the first time I ever surmised that Mr. Grey had taken a notion to me, was once when we were at an apple cutting together down in Maine. Somehow Mr. Grey got into my neighborhood when we ranged round the great basket of apples. I felt my cheeks burn the minute he drew his seat so close to mine, and took out his jack-knife to begin work. He pared and I quivered. I never looked up but once—then his cheek was redder than mine, and he held the jack-knife terribly unsteady. By and by, he got a noble great apple, yellow as gold, and smooth as a baby's cheek. I was looking at his hands sideways from under my lashes, and saw that he was paring it carefully, as if every round of the skin was a strip of gold. At last he cut it off at the seed end, and the soft rings fell down over his wrist, and I took the apple from his fingers."

"Now," said he, in a whisper, bending his head a little, and raising the apple peel carefully with his right hand, "I'm just as sure this will be the first letter of the name I love, as I am that we are alive."

He began swiftly whirling the apple peel round his head; the company were all busy with one another, and I was the only person who saw the yellow links quivering around his head, once, twice, three times. Then he held it still a moment, and sat looking right into my eyes. I held my breath and so did he. "Now," says he, and his breath came out with a quiver, "what if it should be your name?"

"I did not answer, and we both looked back at the same time. Sure enough it was a letter S. No pen ever made one more beautifully. 'Just as I expected,' says he, and his eyes grew bright as diamonds, 'just as I expected!' That was all he said.

"And what answer did you make him, aunt?" asked Robert Otis, who had been listening with a flush face. "What did you say?"

"I didn't speak a word, but quivered on just as fast as I could. As for Mr. Grey, he kept paring and paring, like all possessed. I thought he would never stop paring, or speak a word more. By and by, he struck the point of his knife into an apple, and unwinding the skin from around it, he handed it over to me. It was a red skin, I remember, and cut as smooth as a ribbon."

"I shouldn't a bit wonder if that dropped into a letter G," says Mr. Grey. "Suppose you try it."

"Well, I took the red apple skin, and whirled it three times round my head, and down it went on to the floor, curled up into the nicest capital G that ever you set eyes on."

"Mr. Grey, he looked at the letter, and then sort of sideways into my face. 'S. G.' says he, taking the apple skin, and eating it, as if it had been the first mouthful of a Thanksgiving dinner. 'How would you like to see them two letters on a new set of silver tea spoons?'"

"I really believe you could have lit a candle at my face, it burned so; but I couldn't speak more than if I'd been born tongue-tied."

"But did you never answer about those spoons?" asked Julia.

"Well, yes, I believe I did, the next Sunday night," said the old lady, demurely, smoothing her apron.—[Mrs. Stephen's Fashion and Famine.]

Spirit Rappings.

The French Academy have been investigating the subject of the spirit rappings. The committee to whom the matter was entrusted accord high praise to Dr. Schiff, for the sagacity and patience of his investigations, the result of which appears to be the discovery that in one case, that of a young woman at Frankfort, the rappings were produced by the partial dislocation of tendons and joints, and their return to their natural position. The peculiar method indicated by Dr. Schiff, was the snapping of the tendon of the peroneus longus, over the external malleolus.

It will be recollected that Professor Faraday, in England, investigated the rappings, and attributed them to electrical influences. It is curious to see the learned men of Europe groping as it were in the dark, and examining but one class of the phenomena which have attracted so much attention in this country, and that the merely physical and consequently the most uninteresting part of the so called "spiritual manifestations." In this country where the phenomena have been of the most remarkable order, and have partaken of a mental as well as physical character, there are few who have looked into the subject really believe there is any humbuggery—any snapping of the toes joints, or voluntary effort to produce the rappings on the part of the mediums. Book after book has been written, and theory after theory has been broached, to explain the origin of the manifestations, but none of them, so far as we are aware, have fully met all the characteristics that have been presented. The theory of the spiritual or extra-mundane origin of the "manifestations" certainly presents a many discordant points as any other, and is entirely irreconcilable with the contradictory, trivial and even ludicrous features which mark the phenomena as sometimes exhibited.

There is still a mystery surrounding this subject which we are confident will in good time be cleared up. In the meantime some evil may result from the prevalence of "spiritualism" as a religious creed, but we are inclined to think the incongruous and utterly ridiculous extremes of doctrinal belief which are inculcated by the "spiritual teachers" will soon bring this form of religious doctrine into disrepute. Already we notice that the excesses of some of the disciples of spiritualism have spiritual matches, carnal degradations, and all the ultimate wretchedness thence inevitably resulting. Yet the very persons most active in bringing all this about will protest their own purity, will resent every suspicion raised to their discredit, will accuse all who remonstrate against their course of doing so because personally low minded themselves, and will stand boldly out in their real character only when it is no longer possible to disguise it. All this has commenced, and will be fulfilled in due time. What is to be done about the error deprecated?

Shall it be covered up, winked at, and allowed to work its mischiefs without opposition, rebuke or alarm? No. Those who are aware of these mischiefs are in duty bound to withstand them by timely warning, faithful reproof and uncompromising disavowal. Let the history of spiritism-carnality admonish us. In every age there has been an outbreak of it in connection with some form of religious and philosophical spiritualism, and always with the same abominable results. Commencing with extraordinary professions of innocence, sanctity, and solemn disclaimers of any desire for indulgence in carnal sexualism, it has invariably ended in gross adulteries, fornications, and the miseries consequent thereupon. Within the last generation, our country furnished two marked demonstrations of this nature; that of the Cochranes in Maine, and that of the Prophet Matthias and his adherents in New York. Such cases are beacons on the heights to warn us of impending dangers. Let us all take heed betimes, lest under some specious pretence, deceiving spirits in the flesh, or out of it, seduce us into the pitfalls of corruption. I must expressly deprecate and protest against this error of Free-Loveism, which, I have good reason to fear is beginning to find a welcome among Spiritualists.

These abuses of the new doctrine only show that in "Spiritualism" as in Mormonism and other creeds not based upon the Bible, man is rapidly drifting upon the quicksands of immorality and licentiousness, when he parts from the sheet anchor of the gospel of Christ. —Boston Journal.

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

Saturday, September 30th, 1854.

"BORN TO NO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE."

To READERS. The crowd of advertisements continues and compels us to cut short our usual amount of general intelligence. Bear with us, friends.

MUSICAL. The Luca Family, a band of vocal and instrumental performers, gave a concert on Thursday evening, at the Lyceum room. We dropped in during the evening, and found a very slim audience in attendance, listening to some most excellent music. The voices of the brothers are truly rich, sweet, and of considerable compass, and have evidently been subjected to much practice. The pianist of the company is a young man of less than seventeen years, and for one so young is a fine performer. He plays with brilliancy, power and fine taste, the compositions of the most eminent composers. At the close of the concert, several gentlemen, among whom we noticed one or two of excellent musical judgment, requested the family to give another concert, and expressed their regret at the small house and promising to wake up the music loving citizens. In accordance with this wish, they will give a concert this evening, at the same place, and we are sure that the people of Quincy will show their appreciation of deserving artists by their presence. Doors open at 7 1-2 o'clock, and the concert commences at 8. Tickets only 15 cents.

BOOKS. We call attention to the advertisement in another column, of the Book Sale, to be held this evening, at the Quincy Bookstore. This stock is fresh, bright and handsome, and well worthy the attention of all who ever buy books. Don't forget it, but be on hand and "bid up," or you will lose some good bargains.

DRY GOODS. It will be seen, by referring to another column, that F. A. Jones & Co., 1, 2 & 3 Tremont Row, Boston, are offering the balance of six bankrupt stocks, together with their own stock, at very much reduced prices, in order to close out the accumulated surplus. This must be an unusual opportunity for bargains.

POLITICAL. Syracuse, New York, has been during the past week the meeting place of State Conventions of various kinds and hues. The Regular Free Soil and Free Democratic, the Anti-Nebraska adjourned from Saratoga, the red hot regular Abolition, and the Maine Law convention.

The Anti-Nebraskaites adopted the whig candidate for Governor, M. H. Clark.

PEACHES. We have received through the kindness of Deacon Elijah Baxter, some very large, juicy, and most delicious peaches, which were raised upon his place in this town. They are fit for the palates of the gods and goddesses.

AGRICULTURAL EXHIBITION. An account of the Exhibition of the Norfolk County Agricultural Society, at Dedham, on Tuesday and Wednesday last, was promised to us, but the writer has failed to fulfil his kind intentions. It was a capital affair. A synopsis will be given next week.

RAILROAD TIME. On Monday next, a change in the time of running the cars on the Old Colony and Fall River Railroad will take place, as may be observed by the advertisement in another column.

DEMOCRATIC NOMINATIONS. At the State Convention of the democratic party, held at Lowell, on Tuesday last, Hon. Henry W. Bishop of Lenox, was nominated as a candidate for Governor, and Hon. Caleb Stetson of Braintree, for Lieutenant Governor. For want of room we are obliged to defer until next week, the publication of our correspondent's interesting letter, giving a synopsis of the proceedings of this convention.

CHOWDER. Loring French's chowder, at the Granite Saloon, is now too well known to need our praise. Go this noon, afternoon or evening and get a dish.

THE GOBLIN SNOB. New York: De Witt and Davenport.

We have received from our friends, De Witt and Davenport of New York City, a humorous story entitled "The Goblin Snob," imagined and illustrated by Henry L. Stephens. We would advise our friends of aldermanic proportions to let it alone, lest they increase too much in corporeity. We were rather fearful of reading it through lest we should extend our already sufficient dimensions. But to the lean and poor, we say, get it, read it, laugh, and grow fat!

THE LAMPLIGHTER. Boston: John P. Jewett & Co.

This popular story of city life has already attained a circulation of some sixty-five thousand. It is a beautifully told tale, containing interesting characters, and nothing to which objection can be urged on the score of morality. Gertrude, or "little Gerty," and other characters, are exceedingly well drawn. John P. Jewett & Co., the publishers of this and other works that have had extensive sales, have recently removed to a new and elegant store in Washington street.

For sale at the Quincy Bookstore.

PUTNAM'S MONTHLY. Dear, delightful Putnam for October is on our table. We don't know when we have derived so much pleasure from a magazine as we have in the perusal of the present issue of this elegant periodical, which is an honor to American literature, and will compare favorably with the best of the English magazines. The number is adorned with a very finely finished engraving—the author of "Our New President," "Parties and Politics," &c. The leading article is a very interesting narrative of Count Stedingk, one of the gallant foreigners who came to the aid of our revolutionary grandfathers and helped them achieve American Independence. "Israel Potter" is continued. The other articles are interesting and instructive and some of a curious nature. "The Editor at Large" is decidedly original and refreshing, and the "Editorial Notes" contain some pretty sharp and severe criticisms on English and American new works and reprints.

Mr. Bungay's new book, "Crayon Sketches and Off Hand Takings," which we noticed some weeks ago, is made the subject of considerable fun. You are rather severe Mr. Critic.

Petridge & Co. of Boston, agents; and for sale at the Quincy Bookstore.

Correspondence.

WASHINGTON, (D. C.) Sept. 26, 1854.

MR. EDITOR:—Last week I happened to be present at the United States Naval Academy, in Annapolis, during the examination of several youths who were applicants for admission, among whom was Master Frederick H. French, of your place. Master F., by his fine form, intelligent face and gentle bearing, had attracted the attention of the officers of the school, and was the subject of much complimentary remark. Capt. Goldsborough, the Superintendent of the School, was particularly pleased with him, and praised his manly appearance and intelligent conversation. Judge, then, sir! of the surprise of every one at the rejection of Master Frederick by the Board of Medical Examiners! No one seemed willing to believe it. Capt. Goldsborough thought there must be some mistake about it, but was informed by surgeons in their report, that there was some slight mark upon his person, which brought him within restrictions laid down by the Navy Department, and compelled the board to reject him, which they deeply regretted. Indeed, this youth had made such an impression upon all, that could the strict rules of the department have been relaxed, it would have been done in his case.

I have taken the liberty, Mr. Editor, of communicating these facts for your columns, as a just tribute to this noble boy, who won the admiration and sympathy of all who made his acquaintance at ANNAPOILIS.

DRY GOODS. Our friends who purchase their goods in Boston, are referred to the advertisement of Geo. W. Warren & Co., at whose store they may be sure of obtaining good goods, good treatment, and an equivalent for their money.

Who TAKES? The following lines were picked up in Elm Street, Quincy, and the author is unknown.

The Duke and the Butcher got into a row,
The cause of the fight was an innocent cow.
Now both of the parties were well fed and tough,
But the Butcher soon cried he had had Duke enough.

Special Notices.

English Hosiery, Gloves.

PROBABLY ANOTHER SUCH OPPORTUNITY FOR Great Bargains.

Will not occur for many years. The great stringency of the money market for the past six months has obliged many firms to suspend business, and we have bought their stocks at

ABOUT HALF COST!

37-Of course this will enable us to offer Merchandise

MUCH LESS THAN THE REGULAR TRADE

CAN AFFORD.

And by so doing we have kept

Our Stores crowded with Customers!

Whilst others have been vacant.

37-These Goods we must turn into money immediately, or we shall find ourselves in the same situation as those of whom we bought them.

TO THE AFFLICTED.

[From the New England Directory.]

THE great virtues of Botanical remedies

have, in all ages, been universally approved and acknowledged, but it remained for
 the Chinese to discover a never-failing remedy, not only to cure disease, but to render the face young and blooming, and lengthen the life of man. Such are the benefits derived from the use of the celebrated "COMPOUND ESSENCE OF CHINA ROOT," prepared by Dr. F. MORRILL, No. 15 Howard street.

This invaluable article is composed of thirteen vegetable ingredients, and as no harm is done to the system, it is the only remedy to its being all that Dr. M. claims for it as a nourishing and invigorating remedy for a debilitated and worn-out system. Try it. See Herald and Rev., Boston.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

DR. SPEAR'S WOMAN'S FRIEND is unquestionably the only remedy ever discovered for that distressing complaint, Falling of the Womb, obviating all necessity of resorting to instruments. It is put up in packages, and can be sent to any part of the world.

 Thousands are suffering from pressing down pains, pain in the groin and across the hips and small of the back, also very low down
 the back, with heat and scalding of the water,
 with some affection of the liver, great weakness and prostration of strength, nervous debility, &c. Much exercise, walking, standing,
 riding or lifting, greatly increase the above
 symptoms. In advanced stages of the disease the sufferer is deprived of all exercise, and is obliged to be confined to the house, and frequently to her bed. There is the symptoms of this complaint, all of which can be radically cured by the use of this extraordinary medicine. Price $3 per package.

DR. SPEAR'S GOLDEN BITTERS.

This valuable and popular specific stands

unrivalled for the cure of Female Weakness, Nervousness, Barrenness, Fluor Albus, &c.
 For common cases of weakness in the stomach,
 in male or female, they form an invaluable remedy. If these Bitters were appreciated as their virtues demand, they would find their way into every family. They are compounded especially for those complaints which often form the prelude to many others of a more serious character—such as excessive Nervousness, Prostration of Strength, Bloating of the Bowels, Dropsy, Consumption, Palpitation of the Heart, Scrofula, Cancer in the Womb, Pressing Down of the Bowels, &c. Price $1
 per package, or six packages for $5.

E. D. SPEAR, the celebrated Indian Doctor, No. 15 Kneeland street, Boston, may be consulted at his office, or by letter, upon all diseases which afflict humanity, free of charge.
 Dr. S. invites those who are pronounced incurable to consult him, as he believes that in many cases he will be able to restore them to health.

All letters strictly attended to, and answered promptly.

COMPOUND OF

PURE COD LIVER OIL, LIME AND

SUGAR OF MILK.

THE great value of Cod Liver Oil as a

medicine in Consumption is now generally admitted. It promotes action, restores the prime defect in this disease, by initiating the growth of cells—the cell resulting, according to Dr. Burnett, from the union of a minute particle of oil with albumen, under the quickening influence of vitality. THE PHOSPHATE
 OF LIME has been proved to promote the
 same great end throughout both the vegetable
 and the animal world.

The SUGAR OF MILK, manufactured

from the whey of goat's milk, being a supporter of respiration in weak lungs, and having a powerful affinity for oxygen, greatly aids
 the above remedies in Consumption, and when properly combined with them, makes an effective preparation, removing much of the offensive taste and smell of the oil, and supplying a saccharine combusive for the lungs, much like that elaborated by a healthy liver.

In conducting a large special practice in

THROAT AND LUNG DISEASES, I resort directly to the fisheries for a pure oil. The excellent of this combination will be at once appreciated by my professional brethren, and a trial of it will commend it to the people generally.
